THE CONSUMPTIVE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY W. R. BARBER.

She was most lovely; in her deep-blue eyes
  A lustre not of earth there seemed to dwell;
Her cheeks' bright hue was of the tint which dyes
  The enameled windings of an ocean shell.
Alas! that glow was but the hectic flush
  That mocks yet beautifies the leaf's decay;
The spoiler could not steal without a blush
  The fire that tempered such transcendent clay.

She knew not of her fate; her thoughts and words
  Breathed all of bliss; when her sweet voice grew faint
And came in broken gushes, like a bird's,
  It warbled still of joy; oft would she paint,
As with a pencil dipped in Heaven's own light,
  Some sweet domestic Eden—Love's device—
Nor saw that Death, with arm upraised to smite,
  Stood by the portals of her Paradise.

Oh! 'twas a fearful thing to see her build
  The tower of love as if upon her tomb;
The lip that kissed the poisoned chalice smiled,
  The victim went with garlands to her doom.
She trod the pathway to the shadowy vale
  As if 'twere paved with sunbeams, and when swept Tears down the cheeks with woe and watching pale,
  Smiling, she questioned why the mourners wept.

And so she died—even as slumber's seal
  Weighs down the tired lids of infancy
When evening shadows on its pastimes steal,
  So gently and scarce less unconsciously
Fell the last sleep on her; the spirit guest
  So softly from its fragile mansion fled
That, but for the closed eyes and stirless breast,
  Those who beheld would scarcely deem her dead.

And there was one whose silent misery,
  As low he bent beside the maiden's bier,
Was far more touching than the agony
  That finds relief in shriek and sob and tear.
A dream had come to him on life's bleak waste
  As of an angel stooping from a cloud;
But when the glorious vision he embraced,
  It changed, and lo! a coffin and a shroud.

From that sad hour he seemed as one apart
  From all the things that human passions stir;
His deep, low voice of sorrow smote the heart
  Like the wind sighing round a sepulchre.
A little while, and he was seen no more
  By the green mound that wrapped his plighted bride;
There was a fresher grave—his woes were o'er,
  And Constancy was tombed by Beauty's side.

A QUEER CASE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY ALLAN THORP.

The following story was told me by my friend Tom Griggs, the detective, the other evening. I give it in his own words as nearly as I can remember them.

I was summoned one morning last Winter (said Tom) to the residence of a prominent uptown clergyman, whom I will call Dr. Howe, although that is not his real name. I found the gentleman pacing the floor of his library, evidently much excited.

"Ah, Mr. Griggs, you are here at last!" he exclaimed as I entered. "Be seated, sir. You have been informed already that I was robbed last night, and want the particulars of the affair. I can give you them in a very few words. Mr. Hugh Willis, a member of my congregation, died a fortnight ago, leaving me in his will the sum of five thousand dollars. This legacy I received last evening in cash—ten five-hundred-dollar bills. I locked the money in my desk yonder, intending to deposit a portion of it in the bank to-day, but during the night the money was stolen."

"Was the lock of the desk broken?"

"No; it was picked, or a key was used. It is an ordinary lock, as you can see. A child could pick it."

"Was anything besides the money stolen?"

"Nothing."

"Have you the numbers of any of the bills?"

"I am sorry to say that I have not."

"Then you have no means of identifying any of them?"

"I have not. Stay! I accidentally tore a corner off one of the bills while I was counting the money. I mended the bill with a piece of paper, which I hastily tore from a sheet on my desk. Here is the remainder of the sheet. The paper is, you see, of a rather uncommon tint, and perhaps may be of use to you. But it's a very slight clue."

"You have no reason to suspect any inmate of your house?"

"Oh, no. There is no reason to doubt that the theft was committed by a man who was seen in the garden by at least two members of my household—my wife and a gentleman who is spending a few days with me—the Rev. Dr. Barton of L——, Michigan."

"Ah! a man was seen in your garden. This may be an important clue."

"I'm afraid not; for neither my wife nor Dr. Barton would be able to identify the rascal. Perhaps you would like to question them, and hear from their own lips exactly what they saw."

"If you please."

Dr. Howe summoned a servant, whom he directed to request Mrs. Howe and Dr. Barton to join us. While awaiting their appearance I stepped to the window and looked out. The clergyman's study was situated at the rear of the house, and the window commanded a view of the garden. The dwelling stood quite alone—it was the only building on the block—and access to the garden could have been easily gained by scaling the low fence which surrounded it. Once in the garden, a burglar would have had no difficulty in entering the study, for the window was but five feet or so from the ground.

"I suppose there can be no doubt that the thief entered by this window," Dr. Howe said, joining me. "The fastening, you see, is an ordinary one. I am angry with myself for having been so inexcusably careless. Ah, here they are!"

As he spoke, a tall, handsome, elegantly-dressed woman entered the room, followed by a portly elderly man in clerical costume. The lady Dr. Howe introduced to me as his wife, the gentleman as the Rev. Dr. Barton, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in L——, Michigan.

"You are the first detective I ever saw in my life, sir," said Dr. Barton, with a laugh. "I have, fortunately, never required the services of a member of your fraternity. But I am wasting your time. You want what information I can give you about the burglary, I suppose. I cannot tell you much, I'm sorry to say, but what little I know is quite at your service. Last night I was unable to sleep, and sat in my chamber reading until after midnight. Tiring finally of this occupation, I extinguished the gas and seated myself by the window. I had scarcely done so when I observed the form of a man in the rear of the garden. A moment after I caught sight of him he sprang over the fence and walked rapidly up the street. Fearing that he might be a burglar, I quietly went down-stairs and took a hasty survey of the premises. In the hall I met Mrs. Howe, who, it seems, had also seen the man, and was down on the same errand. Together we made an examination of the doors and windows, and found everything secure except the window of this room, which was unfastened, but not open. As nothing appeared to have been disturbed, and as neither Mrs. Howe nor I was aware that the doctor had received the five thousand dollars, we concluded that we had been unnecessarily alarmed, and returned to our rooms without disturbing any other member of the household."

"I had a raging toothache last night, and could not sleep," added Mrs. Howe, "and while seated at my window saw exactly what Dr. Barton told you he witnessed. My first impulse was to awaken my husband, but I reflected that he had retired unusually fatigued, and I did not disturb him. I went downstairs alone, and in the hall met Dr. Barton. The rest you know."

"Can you give no description of the man you saw in the garden?" I asked.

"I only saw a dark form," the lady replied. "It would be simply impossible for me to identify the person."

"And I, unfortunately," added Dr. Barton, "am no better able than Mrs. Howe to describe the scoundrel."

"At what time did you see him?"

"At about half-past twelve o'clock," replied Mrs. Howe.

Before I left the house I questioned the servants closely. One of them acknowledged that she had entertained a friend in the kitchen, unknown to her mistress, until after midnight, and that while stealing upstairs to bed she had seen Mrs. Howe and Dr. Barton engaged in their examination of the door and window fastenings, but had not been seen by them.

When I left the house, Dr. Howe, his wife and his guest declared themselves quite certain that the money would never be recovered; but I, although I expressed no opinion on the subject, saw a clue which had escaped their eyes.

Well, I worked on the case all that day, and at about seven o'clock in the evening I again presented myself at the clergyman's residence. I was shown to the study, where I found the doctor engaged in the perusal of an evening paper.

"I've just been reading an account of the burglary," he said. "The reporter expresses an opinion that the thief will never be caught; and, to tell the truth, Mr. Griggs, I'm inclined to agree with him."

"So am I," I said; "for he is caught already."

"Is it possible?"

"It is so," I said. "And now, Dr. Howe, I have a somewhat painful disclosure to make."

"What do you mean?" the clergyman exclaimed. "There is something in your tone that terrifies me. Speak out, man!"

"You will remember," I began, "that Mrs. Howe and Dr. Barton both testified that they saw this man in the garden at half-past twelve o'clock last night."

"Yes."

"Are you aware that there was a light fall of snow last night?"

"Yes. What then?"

"It snowed from half-past eleven until a quarter past twelve o'clock. At the hour when Mrs. Howe and Dr. Barton say they saw this man, the snow had ceased to fall. Is it not singular that in walking from this window to the rear of the garden the man left no footprints?"

"What do you mean?" Dr. Howe cried, his face paling.

"Simply that there was no man in the garden last night. As soon as I looked out of the window this morning I noticed the absence of footprints in the snow. Knowing the exact hour of the snowfall, I saw that the story of the unknown man's visit must be false."

Dr. Howe arose quickly, and for a moment I thought that he was going to spring upon me. Then he sank back into his chair.

"Go on, sir, go on!" he cried hoarsely; "but be careful to say nothing that you cannot prove."

"This man who calls himself Dr. Barton," I said, "came to you several days ago with letters of introduction purporting to be signed by several prominent Western clergymen. His business in New York, he said, was to collect funds for a certain charitable institution in the West. You believed his story and extended him your hospitality. I telegraphed to L——, Michigan, to-day, and learned that Dr. Barton, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, is at home, and that this man whom you have received into your house is a swindler, and his letters of introduction forgeries."

"But my wife?" the clergyman cried. "Why did she deceive me? She, too, testified to having seen this man in the garden."

"Mrs. Howe," I replied, "is, as you are aware, sir, extravagantly fond of dress. Unknown to you, she contracted a dressmaker's bill of nearly two thousand dollars. You suspected nothing of this, and she dared not tell you. The dressmaker became pressing in her demands, and threatened to send the bill to you. Mrs. Howe had just returned from an interview with this woman last evening, when she overheard the conversation between you and the gentleman who paid you the five thousand dollars, and saw you put the money in your desk. Rendered desperate by the fear that you would discover her folly, she determined to take two thousand dollars from the desk and pay her creditor, believing that suspicion of the theft would never rest upon her. At half-past twelve o'clock last night she noiselessly descended to this room and took the money. She was surprised in the act by this Dr. Barton, as he calls himself, who was also aware of the presence of the money in the desk, and whose errand in the room was to gain possession of it. He comprehended the situation at once, and demanded the remainder of the five thousand dollars as the price of his silence. Mrs. Howe, greatly terrified, acceded to his demand. The couple were surprised in the hall by the servant who testified this morning that she saw them. They pretended not to see her, and busied themselves in an examination of the bolts and locks. Then the scoundrel invented the story which he and Mrs. Howe told this morning, and which they believed would satisfactorily account for their presence in the hall if the girl should tell what she had seen, and would also prevent suspicion resting upon anyone in the house. Feeling that he could not depend upon Mrs. Howe's continued silence, Barton—or Ramson, for that is his true name—prepared for flight, and was in the act of boarding a westward-bound train this afternoon when I arrested him. He told me the whole story, and threatened, of course, to expose Mrs. Howe if proceedings were taken against him. "Your wife, sir, paid the dressmaker this morning, and one of the bills she gave the woman was the very one you mended last night. Here it is. Do you identify it, sir?"

"Yes, yes; it is the same," gasped the clergyman. "But this dressmaker—is she aware ——"

"She knows nothing. I got the money from her on a plausible pretext. Only you and I and the two persons who took the money know the truth."

"This wretched affair must not be made public. I would make any sacrifice rather than have it known!" groaned the unhappy man.

A few minutes later I left him, promising to do all in my power to keep the story from becoming public property. I succeeded; the affair was hushed up, and the world has never suspected that the man in the garden was a myth. Queer case, wasn't it?

"How had you the audacity, John," said a Scottish laird to his servant, "to go and tell some people that I was a mean fellow and no gentleman?" "Na, na, sir," was the candid answer; "you'll no catch me at the like o' that; I have kept my thoughts to mysel'."

Some ingenious observer has discovered that there is a remarkable resemblance between a baby and wheat, since it is cradled, then thrashed, and finally becomes the flower of the family.

An Irishman in Chicago says his boarding-house keeper must be a chess-player, because she "pawns" the boarders' clothes and gives them "stale mate."

THE NEW VERSION OF THE BIBLE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

They say that many errors grave
  Have neatly been corrected,
And words that no full meaning gave
  Are crossed out or ejected.

They wonder how mistakes so rare
  And marvelous e'er could be;
But now they solemnly declare
  The Bible's as it should be.

Perhaps they'll make a greater change,
  More singularly weighty;
And then the Bible will be strange
  In 1980!

We'll find out then to our surprise
  That slandered Ananias
Never or rarely uttered lies,
  But was extremely pious!

That David never used a sling,
  And didn't kill Goliah,
Who was a jolly, poor old thing,
  And never could stand fire!

We'll read that it was not a whale
  That swallowed the luckless Jonah,
And that poor Rachel of the tale
  Was not the champion moaner!

And more, that Absalom's sad fate
  Was merely idle prattle,
Because he had his hair cut straight
  Two hours before the battle!

Nebuchadnezzar was no beast,
  But a sane king most valid;
And when he went out for his feast,
  He probably ate salad!

We'll learn that humble little Ruth
  Really possessed no feeling,
And in the fields of Boaz, forsooth,
  The girl was simply stealing!

And that old Daniel, best of men,
  Urbane, serene and lettered,
Found that the lions in the den
  Were all securely fettered!

Also that Herod, the grim king,
  Never on slaughter gloated;
But that he was a peaceful thing,
  And upon the children doted!

They'll make unhappy Samson out
  To be a puny creature,
Too weak and worn to limp about,
  With palsy in each feature!

And as for Solomon, I see
  They'll clear up all his mystery;
And prove His Majesty to be
  The biggest fool in history!

Then the new version will find fault
  Because no art cures lepers,
And say Lot's wife turned not to salt,
  But simply turned to peppers!

In fancy and in Hebrew rich,
  Translators in their splendor
Will tell the whole world which is which,
  And which is witch of Endor!

Also that Noah ne'er let the dove
  Go from the Ark (the sinner);
But, as he relished the above,
  He had it stewed for dinner!

And so they go on without fear,
  New versions ever seeking,
Until at last we think we hear
  Old Balaam's donkey speaking.

Such are the many errors grave
  The wise men have corrected;
But they, like words that no sense gave,
  Should also be ejected! CUPID JONES.

DRAMATIC HUMOR.

WRITTEN AND SELECTED FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY JAMES OWEN O'CONNOR.

What's the difference between Shylock's foe, Antonio, and a deer butcher? One is the Merchant of Venice, the other the merchant of venison.

What's the difference between a flying bird and a procrastinating actor? One parts his wings, the other "wings" his parts.

Poor Nashville gnashed over the Bernhardt's "swell rigging." Jes so. Sally always was mistress of her "craft."

What's the difference between the average property-man and a Lenten fish diet? One minds the "props.," the other props the mind.

Bill Shakespeare was not an Ohio man, and yet he frequently wrote about "cabinets."

What's the difference between Robert Burns and J. H. Haverly? Poor Burns was a gauger, rich Haverly is an engager.

What's the difference between a punning low-comedian and an unjust legislator? One gags the part, the other gags the whole.

Skating helps the rinks, but not the larnyx.

French Sara appeared at Mobile in a bandbox of a hall, as void of scenery as a bullock's smithy. Hence her "weeps" and faints in that Sa(ha)ra.

Lotta may (or may not) be an old maid; but she's the friskiest, liveliest, sauciest, kickingest old maid in life's Crab-tree Lotta-ry.

Would not Shakespeare have dubbed "Bernhardt" (German for "yellow heart") a "tricksy spirit," and unrefined?

A nincompoop or æsthetic idiot remains to be dramatized for the coming Sothern-or O'Gorman.

Hamlet's paternal "spook" might well have characterized this as a naygur and a nipping air.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

G. W. M., Cheyenne.—1. To count a pin at pinpool it must be either down or at least two inches from its spot. 2. Whoever printed the alleged rule that it must be down did not know anything about pinpool. Suppose a pin is knocked over and over for a distance of four or five feet, strikes the cushion and then stands up, either against the cushion or a foot or more from it. Is the striker to be denied a natural in case all the other pins are down but the middle one? The trouble is that every Tom, Dick and Harry who gets into the billiard-manufacturing business nowadays thinks it incumbent upon him to print "rules," and in trying to make his "rules" different from somebody else's—more in language than in substance, however—he is pretty certain to blunder somewhere.

MORRISSEY'S BILLIARD PARLORS, Syracuse.—1. You were probably playing pyramid pool. Having hit his own ball and no other, A made a miss; and if he has no object ball, he owes one to the table. 2. All the rules that are necessary are to play the game in the same way as the ordinary fifteen-ball pool, save that eight balls make a man winner, and that, instead of "scratches," the penalties for going off the table or making a miss is the returning of a ball to the table at once or as soon as the offender has one. You need to be careful, as a roomkeeper, to see that the fun is not kept going invariably until all the balls are pocketed. See answer to "H. C. E., Toledo."

ONE BALL POOL.—The striker being frozen, he can play away from the ball to which his own is fast without incurring the dire penalty of a miss. All that is requisite is that he shall separate the balls. If he does not do so, he forfeits the game. To require him to hit a ball with which his own is already in contact is to permit him to just touch cue to ball, and so leave a "freeze" for the next man. The other players can do the same, and the game be continued until kingdom-come. It is to prevent this that the old-time rule as to "freezing" is continued in force.

PITTSBURG.—1. Dead Burke fought Sam O'Rorke at New Orleans, La., and O'Donnell on Hart's Island, N. Y. 2. Dick Goodwin beat W. Ingram and Jack Shore, and fought a draw with Arthur Chambers in England, and since his arrival in America has fought a draw with Mike Coburn. The latter was a glove contest. 3. Patrick Brannigan ("Scotty of Brooklyn") beat Barney Aaron, and was beaten by Dan Smith ("Young Bendigo"). Brannigan and Aaron were 120lb men, and Smith weighed 128lb. The maximum limit of feather-weight is 113lb.

A READER, Cambridgeport.—1. If your questions were received, they were answered. 2. High wins the deal in cutting at seven-up. 3. It depends upon when the misdeal occurs. 4. Jack turned up counts even if the cards are bunched. 5. If there is a tie for game, the non-dealer counts for it. 6. High and low go out before jack or game, no matter when the latter two points are made. Jack turned up goes out ahead of high.

J. E. ST. C., Ulrichsville.—In betting that Buchanan, had he lost Pennsylvania in 1856, would have lost the Presidency, J. loses. He might have lost the Presidency, that is all. He could have lost Pennsylvania in the November election, and still have got a majority of all the Electoral votes. He could have failed to get a majority of all the Electoral votes and have got the Presidency through the vote of the House, because no other candidate got such a majority.

M. F., Detroit.—The bet having been as to a double event, it was won as soon as one of the events was decided against A. Providence having been beaten by Buffalo, it was immaterial to the bet whether the Troy Club played or not. A would still have lost if Troy had played and won.

INQUIRER, Brighton.—1. Hugh Nicol played last year with a club at Topeka, Kas. 2. John O'Rourke is railroading at present. 3. James Whitney of the Bostons played last year with the Knickerbockers of San Francisco. 4. Foley of last year's Bostons is now playing with the Buffalo Club.

J. G., Detroit.—The bet was upon a game to be played by two given clubs on a given day. Playing on another day will not answer, unless in virtue of a special agreement or because of a rule of baseball governing bets. There is no such rule, there was no such agreement, and the bet is void.

G. M.—1. Of course, if the cloud is very heavy the sun will not be visible. 2. Shad have been known to go for a "fly" in fresh water, and hooking them in that way is regarded as rare sport by the few who have had the opportunity.

W. R. M., Independence.—Every one of those six matters depends altogether upon who it is that is to decide. When we are to decide bets, we prefer to know exactly what they are. This is equally for the protection of bettors and for our own possible vindication.

C. M., Bristol.—1. A straight will beat nothing at all unless it has been agreed to play it, and then it should also be agreed as to whether it shall beat only two-pair, as in most coteries, or three-of-a kind, as in some. 2. A straight never beats a flush.

LEE KELLEY, Zaneville.—1. The O'Leary American belt is held by P. J. Panchot. The O'Leary International Belt was won by John Hughes, who forfeited possession of it, and it is being now competed for for the second time. 2, 3, 4. See CLIPPER ALMANAC.

G. M. S.—1. We do not know. 2. The lightning-express trains are probably faster here. There can be no just comparison, on the whole, because there are so many more trains here that some of them ought to be slower than the slowest over there.

J. CARLAN, Cleveland.—Although there was no clause to that effect in the very loosely drawn-up articles, you would be in honor bound to pay forfeit if there was a forfeit up, and you failed to appear on the ground, prepared to start, between the hours named.

E. F. M.—Dick Curtis, the Pet of the Fancy, was defeated by Perkins, the Oxford Pet, in a match for $500 a side, at Hurley Bottom, Berks, Eng., Dec. 30, 1828, eleven rounds being fought in 32½ min. It was Curtis' last fight.

G. R., Cherry Valley.—J. Wilkinson of Idle won a 200yds. handicap at the Newhall Grounds, Sheffield, Eng., July 19, 1875, and a 200yds. handicap at the Queen's Grounds, same place, Feb. 13, 1877. H. Wilkinson is not on record as having won a Sheffield handicap since 1857.

H. C. R., Toledo.—1. You can get the rules of pyramid pool as played in England by purchasing H. W. Collender's book "Modern Billiards." The game is not played here in several particulars as it is there. 2. See answer to "Morrissey's Billiard-parlors, Syracuse."

R. A., Allegheny City.—1. The Alleghenys defeated the Hartfords July 30, 1877, by a score of 2 to 0. 2. Dennis Brouthers played with the Troys during the latter part of the season of 1879.

X Y Z, Richmond.—Hitting a ball that is holed is the same as hitting a white ball in play before hitting the red. The stroke counts for the antagonist.

CASSINO, San Francisco.—Having placed a deuce from your hand on to a four on the board and made a six, you could not at your next play raise that pile to seven by an ace from any quarter.

A. B. C., Dallas.—The withdrawal stands good. There is no analogy between this case and one in which a bet is procured by fraud.

R. L. M., Brighton Centre.—The Great Eastern repeatedly entered this harbor, which is proof that she did not draw sixty feet of water or more than one-half of it.

J. M.—The player with the six cards has nothing to say as to the jack-pot or anything else connected with that deal, if he either raised his cards or looked at them. His hand is foul. No misdeal.

G. F. C.—Our time is too valuable to waste on mathematical puzzles or such trifles. There are books published that illustrate matters of that kind.

W. G.—As the bet was worded, A would lose if B threw eleven or any number beyond that. A had to say "eleven and no more," if he meant that when he proposed to bet.

ROCKS, Trenton.—We have given the decision. Andrew Johnson was impeached. You win. Let somebody else explain why you win. It is a question of space with us.

OLD SPORT, Ottawa.—1. Teaching sparring for money would make him a professional athlete, according to rules governing amateur associations. 2. No.

MARIA, Leominster.—At cassino, neither player is out when, both having made enough to put themselves out, neither called out before the last trick was lifted. Play another hand to decide it.

F. M. G., Providence.—If the player with four either lifted his cards or looked at them, his hand is foul, and he must step down and out. He can claim nothing.

CONSTANT READER, Utica.—Prof. Chas. F. Ottignon died in this city Nov. 14, 1880, and his portrait, with obituary notice, appeared in THE CLIPPER dated Nov. 20.

SOCIAL, Brooklyn.—A committee appointed with full power is supposed to have full control over the picnic until it is over, when it is expected to make a report. The club should regulate such matters.

DECLINED—"Is There Hope?" "The Devonshire Swells," "The Game of Cribbage," "To Pauline," "A Word of Advice."

C. G., Bradford.—Several parodies on that song have already appeared in print.

J. M. & Co., Philadelphia.—If the bet was made previously to the retirement of Albert, the man who bet on Rowell won.

J. H. C., Springfield.—1. Cross-handed. 2. That is the modern style.

C. R., Philadelphia.—1. See THE CLIPPER ALMANAC for the longest runs at billiards. 2. See answers in amusement columns.

J. A. W., Fort Wallace.—1. Specify the John Weaver. 2. See answers in our amusement column.

W. L. B., Stamford.—Had you read the report in last week's CLIPPER, you would have seen that he started from the eleven-yard mark.

A. W. L., Sioux City.—The matter will be difficult to settle. We have not the data to justify a decision either way.

H. J. S., Rock Island.—You will find the best pacing and nearly all other records in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC.

BENJAMIN, Cambridge.—A loses if the game was finished after the first half of the ninth inning, as provided by the new rule.

F. A. B., Brooklyn.—Soda water or ginger-ale drunk to excess is liable to injure the health of some persons.

J. F. M., Savannah.—It would be hard to say. There are too many differences of opinion, and too few books shown.

READER, Jersey City.—The dealer, in serving on the draw, having exposed a card, the player is entitled to the next one.

SUBSCRIBER.—It is out of the question to claim a misdeal after you have played all or a portion of your cards.

F. D.—No. To claim a game on a call-out the call must be made before the last trick of the last deal is lifted.

J. P., Floodwood.—O'Baldwin fought Marsden (twice) and Isles in England, and Wormald in this country.

R. H.—According to recent estimates, the population of the world is given as 1,455,923,500.

ROXEY.—1. See THE CLIPPER ALMANAC. 2. It is immaterial. You can tell upon trial which method suits you best.

STAR, San Francisco.—Charles Whitney of last years Knickerbockers is not at present playing with any baseball club.

REGULAR, Pittsfield.—1. The Worcester Club is a member of the League this season. 2. He would probably win.

LEX AVE.—1. We cannot call it to mind just now. If it was accepted, it will appear in due time. 2. We do not require one there.

W. A. L., New Orleans.—Those articles are continued in a Philadelphia journal.

R. S. F., Utica.—At partner cribbage a player is not supposed to touch his cards until the deal is finished.

OLD PLAYER, New Haven.—Your antagonist is wrong. The count is 34 for 4, 4, 5, 6, 6.

SUBSCRIBER, Detroit.—The score being even, the party who bet they would make more loses.

J. W.—John Eanis covered 445 miles 335yds. in that race.

MCCULLOUGH, St. Louis.—Bill Poole was shot Feb. 25, 1855, died March 8, and was buried March 11.

T. C. E., Randolph.—1. Four sevens and an ace count 24. 2. The count for two sixes and three threes is 18.

R. P. H.—We did not keep a record of those so-called matches. The championship was not involved.

C. E.—Write to the Pope Manufacturing Company, 307 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

W. C. L., Galveston.—The fact of his making a private bet does not affect a man's standing as an amateur.

ANOTHER OLD-TIMER has left us. Many of our readers will recall the fat, chubby, silver-voiced vocalist Napoleon W. Gould, who played the guitar with several of our minstrel troupes, notably E. P. Christy's, the Bryants', George Christy's, Sniffen's Campbell's, and M. Campbell's. His death, chronicled elsewhere in this issue, revives the memory of many of the old-time songs he was wont to warble, such as "Fair Shines the Moon To-night," "I See Her Still in My Dreams," "Sunlight on the Sea," "Star of Love," "Ettie May," "Annie of the Vale," "The Merry Gondolier," "La Zingarina," "Mollie, Do You Love Me?" "She's Black, but That's no Matter," "Under the Willow She's Sleeping," Stephen Foster's "Cora Dean" and "Bright Virginia Belle," Stephen Massett's "Our Good Ship Sails To-night," and Sep. Winner's "List to the Mocking-bird." Melody ran in his family. He was the son of a vocalist who had trained with Michael Balfe, and he was, we believe, the brother of Miss Julia Gould, who had trained under Balfe, and who married Collins the tenor. About fifteen years ago Gould went to England, where he taught the guitar and occasionally appeared in public. Since his return to this country, or rather since Bryants' Minstrels left 472 Broadway, he had to a great extent passed out of the popular mind.

THE WICKED WORLD is buying the New Bible with a rush. Why is this? The sinners buy it in the hope that hell is done away with altogether, and that they may look into the future without fear of that fire and brimstone which the Old Bible has threatened them with so eternally. The rich sinner gives the revised edition a very careful perusal with the view of ascertaining whether there is not an easier route to heaven than that which leads thereto only through the eye of a needle. Everybody desires to learn whether the chances of salvation are not more encouraging in the revised Testament than they were in the uncorrected book. The sinful city of London sold two millions of copies of the new work in a few days after its publication, while our own pious city sold nearly a million of copies in the same time. This is proof positive of the superiority of New York, in a religious point of view, over London. Paris will consume an enormous supply of the New Testament, that city being at the head of the list in wickedness. Verily, the revised edition is having a good send-off.

TRUE INWARDNESS.

Conkling, he, clomb up a tree,
The sights of Albany for to see;
While Tommie Platt up another gat,
And watch-ed Roscoe where he sat;
Then Roscoe, he, dropped from the tree,
Having seen all there was to see—
When Tommie Platt, observing that,
Came tumbling, too, on Conkling, flat!
Then dusted each sad, sobbin' son,
Ere one could say Judge Robinson! *

* The Judge's name is Robertson, but this, you will notice, would make but a sorry rhyme; so we have given him that name which, for our purpose, should have been given him at his birth.

THE REVISED New Testament is out, but we have had no time to examine it thoroughly in order to ascertain whether the revisers have done their work properly and with an eye single to the public good. There are many objectionable passages in the Bible which Mr. A. Comstock should have expunged long ago, but didn't. We hope the gentlemen who have corrected the good book have omitted all passages of an immoral tendency. We think, however, that the Bible, with its corrections, should have been submitted to the New York Board of Aldermen for their approval before offering it for sale on the counters of book and news dealers.

SENATOR PLATT committed no objectionable act when he sent in his own resignation; but when he compelled his colleague, Senator Conkling, to follow his example, and send in his resignation likewise, he did that of which no prudent man can approve. Had Senator Conkling possessed the moral courage which has heretofore been ascribed to him, he would not have permitted himself to be dragged into this suicidal act by the stalwart Platt, who, we have always been led to believe, was a man of peace.

THE WHIRLIGIG OF TIME brings its revenges. According to our San Francisco advices by telegraph, Tom Keene, who began in that city with a grand flourish of trumpets, dropped in business instantly, while John T. Raymond, who had opened at a rival house to but modest business, has been drawing improved audiences ever since. It is therefore plain that the real Fresh the American in San Francisco has been Keene, instead of Raymond.

SKATES can now be bought three for a quarter; those who have no quarter to give, and will make affidavit that they are too poor to purchase a pair of skates, can take their pick at "two for five." Prices of these Winter luxuries are variable when warm weather sets in.

RETURNED.—The gentleman who plays cornet-solos in the public streets, by "moonlight alone," has just got back from Europe, and may soon be heard in his accustomed haunts. His mission abroad was not entirely successful, owing to the sharp competition prevailing on the other side of the Atlantic.

IT WAS a beautiful sight early last Monday morning when fourteen stalwart pedestrians, good and true, were launched upon the bosom of their native element at Madison-square Garden. It filled the spectator with lofty emotion and—beer! A fair field, good track, and may the best man win.

TEMPERANCE MEN had no cause of complaint last week, for the rain it rain-ed every day, winding up with a good, old-fashioned drenching shower on the Sabbath. It was "water, water, everywhere, but not a drop to drink," except water.

IN THE RACE now going on in Madison-square Garden Hazael may get the belt if he has seal enough to push ahead. Heretofore he has pushed ahead his own head considerably in advance of his body.

DECORATION-DAY is next in order, and the lilies of the valley and the flowers of the field are fast ripening for the occasion. Big sunflowers will please be omitted when floral tributes are offered.

THE LAST OF THE PLACIDES.—This week our column devoted to deaths in the profession records the passing-away of Mrs. William R. Blake. Caroline Placide was the last of a talented family who have disported upon the American stage in almost all possible capacities, from dancing on the tight-rope to mixing up low comedy with the profoundest tragedy, and sandwiching the highest of high-comedy between character-acting and operatic singing.

IT IS NOW as clear as day why Tom Baker, the veteran musical-director, does not wear his hair curled. He and his wife have been figuring in the courts lately. He maintained that she had been handling him roughly, and he has changed his bed and board from Brooklyn to this city.

THERE is now more music in the air than ever. Every fourth or fifth peanut-stand has a steam-engine at work. One of these days there will be peanuts in the air, along with the fragments of an experimental Italian engineer.

BECAUSE the penurious barkeeper gave him a scant thimbleful when he called for a dose of brandy, the thirsty imbiber intimated that the dispenser of liquids must belong to the "short-horn" breed.

IT IS not true that Alexander Stevens is going to work up the Hoboken horror into a new tragedy. We make this statement in behalf of Alexander the great.

EXCEEDING HIS AUTHORITY.—From a letter received from our Detroit, Mich., correspondent we are apprised that he has charged troupes with the expense of telegraphing to THE CLIPPER reports of their business. He had never had any instructions from us so to do, but, on the contrary, was explicitly informed that all such telegrams should be sent at our expense, C. O. D. Any person or persons who may have paid him any money for such a purpose will, upon notifying us of the amount, have it promptly refunded.

WILLIAM STAFFORD,

whose portrait, with that of Anna Boyle, appears on our first page, is the professional name of W. P. Schmidt, a native of Louisville, Ky. The date of his birth is given as Nov. 5, 1859, and he resided with his parents until he was about sixteen years old in his native city, receiving there the rudiments of a liberal education. While a schoolboy he evinced a decided taste for theatricals, and commenced to read and study the works of the master-minds of the English drama. In 1875 Mr. Stafford was sent to the Adams Academy, in Quincy, Mass., to prepare for Harvard University. While in Quincy he availed himself of every opportunity to witness the performances of the best actors, and continued his studies to the extent of committing to memory the lines of those characters which he now personates, but then with no idea of adopting the stage as a profession. In 1877 Mr. Stafford changed his mind in regard to going to Harvard University, and entered the Institute of Technology in Boston, intending to prosecute the studies necessary to enable him to graduate as a civil-engineer. Soon after, however, he discovered that he had become so wedded to the drama that he could not give to the study of civil-engineering the time and attention essential to success in it, and finally concluded, with the consent of his parents, to adopt the stage as a profession, and played an engagement at the Boston Theatre, opening in "Shylock" on Oct. 30, 1878. Mr. Stafford received flattering and encouraging notices from the Boston press. The Daily Transcript said:

His expressive grace in gesture and carriage on the stage, and his intelligent force in the delivery of his lines, made it hard to believe that he is but nineteen years old and a novice. Had Booth's Shylock never been seen, Mr. Stafford's performance would demand attention as a very strong one.

The Boston Herald, in the course of an elaborate article, remarked:

He made an excellent impression by his personation of Shylock, and it is not hazardous to say that he has in him the stuff of which good actors are made, and that a promising future lies before him if he will but persevere. It was a bold experiment for a youth of nineteen, with no practical experience on the stage, to essay a role made familiar to playgoers by some of the most noted actors of the day, and the chances were ten to one that his efforts would result in disastrous failure; but, in spite of the disadvantages under which he labored, he gave a creditable performance, which, though of course crude, was at no time displeasing, and frequently was deserving of praise. His faults were those to be expected in a novice. He has one advantage over most young actors, however, in the graceful and appropriate use of his hands and arms, his gestures being invariably good.

After the close of his Boston engagement Mr. Stafford made a starring tour in the West and South, appearing as Claude Melnotte, Petruchio, Romeo, Shylock, Othello and Cassius, and received flattering encouragement. The following season he became a member of the Bowers-Thompson Combination, and at the close of his engagement he joined a company organized by W. H. Power for a short Spring campaign. In the Summer of 1880 Mr. Stafford went to Europe for the purpose of pursuing his professional studies and witnessing the performances of the best actors in London, Paris, and other large cities. He returned to America a few weeks ago to prepare for his approaching engagements.

Mr. Stafford is of medium size. He has pliable features, black hair and eyes, and his countenance is highly intellectual. He has great powers of facial expression, his movements are easy, and his gestures graceful and appropriate. His voice, the all-important organ to the actor, is favorable for the stage, being sufficiently powerful, sweet and rich in tone. Mr. Stafford makes his first bow to a New York audience in Claude Melnotte, to Miss Anna Boyle's Pauline, May 30, at the Windsor Theatre.

ANNA BOYLE,

as we are informed, was born Nov. 22, 1862, in Washington D. C. She was educated at home by her parents, except in music and dancing, for which she had competent instructors. At about seven years of age she became interested in the plays of Shakespeare, and commenced to take part in the readings of a Shakespearian club that met weekly at her home. At twelve she had acquired a high reputation among those who knew her as a Shakespearian scholar and a reader of blank verse, and commenced to give readings occasionally at her home to invited guests. She was also the central figure at literary soirees in the houses of her friends. As part of her education, her parents had always taken care that she should not lose any opportunity of witnessing the performances of the best actors and actresses that visited Washington.

Before she had entered upon her fourteenth year she expressed so decided a wish to become an actress that it was thought unwise to try to dissuade her from it. On May 31, 1877, she made her debut at the National Theatre, in Washington, D. C., as Juliet—the only one of Shakespeare's heroines suited to her extreme youth. She was on that day just fourteen years six months and nine days old. Her success was complete. Every seat in the theatre was occupied, the best people in Washington having turned out. The little girl's triumph was not only an artistic success, but a pecuniary one, owing in a great measure to the influence, generosity and hard work of her friends and admirers, headed by Grace Greenwood and Col. Don Piatt of The Washington Capital, of whom and others in Washington Miss Boyle now speaks with grateful remembrance. Her subsequent personations of Juliet were equally well received. Not wishing to confine herself to one play, however, she commenced to study Fanchon. She was then so young and petite that she could find no other play to suit her. She wished also to exhibit her versatility by acting successfully a role dissimilar from that of Juliet. In August, 1878, she made her first appearance in Philadelphia in Fanchon, which she played one week, and with such marked success that she was shortly afterwards engaged to give nine representations of the little waif in Cincinnati, where she was equally well received. After that, although Miss Boyle made specialties of Juliet and Fanchon, she began to add to her repertory as she gradually matured in form and appearance. Pauline in "The Lady of Loyns" was her next personation, and it was a success. Since she has been sixteen years of age she has played in the West and South all sorts of leading roles, as the exigencies of circumstances have made it necessary. She is never seen to advantage in any character that is not pronounced of its kind, whether tragic, emotional, or in broad farce or extravagant burlesque. She has played successfully in all the above lines; also in modern society plays.

During her engagement at the Windsor Theatre, elsewhere referred to, she will be seen also as Juliet and Fanchon, her two favorite characters.

— They tell it of Gounod. He was sitting in his house the other day, enjoying a chat with a friend, when an organ-grinder entered the courtyard and assailed one of Gounod's sweetest melodies. "Great Heaven!" exclaimed he as the first bar struck him in the left ear, "why has such a curse fallen upon composers? Cannot we attain popularity without enduring this—this calumny?" This has been made up by some such gushing writer for the press as Olive Logan. All that Gounod actually said was one word. It has but four letters, and does not begin or end with a vowel.

— Miss Henrietta Markstein the pianist, who sued the Kuntz Brothers for $2,000 for breach of contract with her in regard to a benefit she was to have been given at Madison-square Garden Sept. 20, 1881, in lieu of salary for playing there in a series of promenade concerts from Aug. 1 forward, recovered a judgment for $480 on May 19.

— The ladies of the Oratorio Society on May 19 surprised Dr. Leopold Damrosch by presenting him with a bust of Beethoven, two elegant wicker easy-chairs upholstered in embossed scarlet velvet and old gold, and a heavy silver tray containing a large pitcher, goblet and a finger-bowl, all of solid silver. One of the chairs is intended for Mrs. Damrosch, who may also find use for the goblet.

— It is promised that Edward Audran the composer is coming to this city to superintend the production of something fresher from his musical noddle than "Olivette" or "Mascot."

— Mme. Etelka Gerster returned to this city on May 20.

— R. W. Fisher, chief-usher at the Academy of Music, this city, was last week presented by his assistants with an album containing the portraits of the attaches of that house.

DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION.

NAPOLEON W. GOULD

Died at his residence, No. 168 East Thirty-second street, New York City, May 23, in his sixty-second year. He was the son of Wm. Gould, a lawyer, and Elizabeth C. Gould, a vocalist, and was born at Ludgate Hill, London, Eng., June 7, 1819. In 1829 he commenced to learn the manufacture of guitars and to play upon them with Panormo, a celebrated maker. He made his first appearance as a solo-guitarist at Braham's Coliseum, Regent's Park, London, in 1836. Subsequently he appeared at all the principal theatres and concerts in London, and visited Ireland in 1842, remaining one year in Cork, concertizing and teaching. Returning to London, he appeared at the Royal Vauxhall Gardens. John Collins, balladist, and Mr. Gould sang and played together, appearing in England and Ireland. He came to America in 1848 with Max Maretzek as second tenor of the Fry Italian-opera Troupe, appearing at the Astor-place Opera-house, in this city. After remaining with this troupe for a time, he made his American debut as a guitarist at the Melodeon. In the Fall of 1849 he played with the Germania Helmsmuller Band. His next engagement was with E. P. Christy, contracting with him for one year, but remaining six years, never missing a single performance during that time. His song entitled "She's Black, but That's no Matter," became very popular. After leaving the Christy party he joined Max Maretzek's Italian-opera Troupe and visited Havana. He was the second-tenor, and also played the harp. He afterwards joined Bryant's Minstrels, with whom he remained some years. Later he engaged with Geo. Christy at Metropolitan Hall, 585 Broadway, and his last appearance in the minstrel business was with Geo. Christy, at the Fifth-avenue Theatre, in Twenty-fourth street, this city, since which time he has been teaching the guitar and banjo here.

MRS. W. R. BLAKE died at her residence in Long Branch, N. J., May 21, in the 84th year of her age. Caroline Placide came of a well-known theatrical family. Mons. and Mme. Alexandre Placide and troupe made their first appearance in this city in the John-street Theatre Feb. 3, 1792, in a variety of feats on the tight-rope and in the ballet of "The Two Philosophers." Subsequently, in Charleston, S. C., Mr. Placide married Miss Wrighten, daughter of an actress known as Mrs. Pownall. By this marriage he had a numerous family, among whom Henry, Thomas, Caroline, Eliza (who was afterwards Mrs. Asbury and Mrs. Mann) and Jane were all well known to the American stage. At the Park Theatre, in this city, then under the management of T. A. Cooper, a ballet pantomime entitled "Love's Stratagems," performed entirely by children, was produced Sept. 21, 1807, and in it Caroline Placide impersonated a shepherd. She had been on the stage from infancy. She made her debut in an adult character April 20, 1814, in the Anthony-street Theatre, playing Eliza in "Laugh When You Can," in which her sister Eliza made her first appearance, playing Charles. About that time she married Leigh Waring, by whom she had one daughter, who subsequently became a popular actress as Mrs. William Sefton and later as Mrs. James W. Wallack Jr., and who died at Long Branch Feb. 11, 1879. In the Chatham Garden, May 19, 1834, Mrs. Waring, then a young and blooming widow, made her reappearance after an absence of ten years, playing Miss Dorillon in "Wives as They Were and Maids as They Are," and also Marian Ramsay in the farce of "Turn Out." On July 12 William Rufus Blake, then a dashing light-comedian, made his debut on the New York stage in this theatre, and on Aug. 26, 1826, he led Mrs. Waring to the altar. At the Lafayette Theatre, in Laurens street, Sept. 8, 1826, Mr. Blake first introduced his wife to the public in the character of Marian Ramsay; and Mr. Blake then first attempted the impersonation of an elderly character—Dr. Truckle—the occasion being his benefit. Mrs. Blake was subsequently at the Park Theatre, and made her last appearance there during the season that ended Aug. 16, 1834. When the Olympic Theatre (afterwards so famous under Mitchell) was originally opened by Henry Willard and W. R. Blake—for whom it was built—Sept. 13, 1837, Mrs. Blake was of the company. She was also engaged at Brougham's Lyceum during its first season, commencing Dec. 23, 1850, and the next season was at Burton's Chambers-street Theatre. When Brougham's Lyceum was first opened as Wallack's Theatre, Sept. 8, 1852, Mrs. Blake was a member of the company, and so remained until Sept. 17, 1855, when she went to the Broadway Theatre. After playing there two seasons, she returned to Wallack's. In the Summer of 1858 she was at Niblo's Garden, and on Sept. 6 she opened at Laura Keene's Theatre. During the season of 1859-60 she was at the Winter Garden. She was again seen at that house in May, 1862, playing with Kate Bateman, and the last characters she portrayed were Joan in "Geraldine" and Marita in "Rosa Gregorio." She was engaged for the season of 1862-3 at Laura Keene's Theatre, but an attack of nervous prostration prevented her from appearing. Since the death of her husband, in Boston, Mass., April 22, 1863, she has never appeared upon the stage. As a general actress Mrs. Blake had very few superiors, for she was at ease in tragedy, comedy, opera or farce. At one time she achieved much success as a vocalist, having sung the principal roles in all of the old English operas, and most of the second roles in modern works. When the opera of "Cinderella" was produced at the Park Theatre for the first time in America, Jan. 24, 1830, she was the Clorinda, and her singing and acting, it is thought, has not been surpassed by any of her successors. Comedy was her chief forte, and in that she secured general approbation. During the later portion of her career she confined herself to old women, in which line she gained much applause.

MRS. JOHN CRESTON died of rheumatism of the heart in New Haven, Ct., May 13, aged 33 years. She was noted for her skill in rifle-shooting, and, with her husband and his brother, had exhibited in many of the variety theatres in this country. Some years ago she won considerable celebrity as an equestrienne at the county fairs in Illinois, having been awarded several diplomas. She had been in retirement for some time past in New Haven, where her husband keeps a shooting-gallery. She was a native of Mount Carmel, Ill., where her father and mother still reside, and whither her remains were taken May 16 for interment. Her husband and a child ten years old survive her.

JOHN MORRIS committed suicide by taking morphine in Milford, Ill., May 18. He was a variety performer, and had been traveling with Sells Bros.' Circus, which he left in Peoria in consequence of irregular conduct. In a fit of desperation he swallowed the fatal drug, and was found dead in his bed by one of the servants in his boarding-house.

THERE IS A LETTER in the Post-office, Cadiz, Ohio, for W. B. Knapp, of the "Dotty Goodt" Combination.

Send stamped directed envelope for same: Alice Coleman, with Tony Denier's "Humpty Dumpty" Co.; Louis Aldrich, of Aldrich & Parsloe's "My Partner" Comb.; Ed. S. Ltford, of Boston Ideal Minstrels; and Mr. Surrey, Treasurer, Jay Rial's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Co.

THE RING.

WHITE'S EXHIBITION.

Frank White's "hen," at Wendell's Assembly Rooms, on West Forty-fourth street, May 21, was numerously attended by lovers of the game of box; and if the men of science did not appear in force, the number of set-tos was sufficient to please everybody, especially those who delight to see hard knocks given and received. The names of the performers, in the order of appearance upon the stage, were as follow: Young Clark and young Dougherty, Dave Reed and Larry McGinity, Jim Hickey and English Harry, Fiddler Neary and Scotty, George Taylor and Jerry Murphy, Martin Sinnot and Johnny Cash, Charles Goodey and Titus, Jim Naylor and Jim Carroll, Dan Douglass and Charley Norton, Young English and Young Irish, and White and Pat Jourdan for the wind-up. The company was good-natured, and by their actions showed that they were well pleased. Mike Donovan was present and would have been pleased to set-to also, but his damaged thumb rendered it impossible, and he went on the stage, stated the fact and apologized. White and his quondam antagonist Jimmy Kelly also had a growl, the old sore being reopened, and, as a result of the animated "chinning," a new match will probably be made between them. Uncle Bill Tovee was master of ceremonies.

RYAN'S SHOW.

Paddy Ryan's exhibition attracted over a thousand people to Irving Hall, this city, on the evening of Wednesday, May 18. The volunteers who sparred were Jerry Leary and Fiddler Neary, Pete Croker and Tim Driscoll, English Harry and Johnson, Jimmy Kelly and Jerry Murphy, Dooney Harris and Jack Turner, Mike Donovan and George Siler, Jim Barry and Bob Kearns, and Dan Dougherty and Charley Norton. The majority of these encounters were well worth looking at and afforded much pleasure to the spectators. Disappointment was felt, however, because of the failure of Joe Goss (who had been substituted for John Flood) to set-to with the man who defeated him for the championship a year ago. This was due, as Goss explained from the stage, to the fact that Paddy "went back" on an alleged promise to pay Joe one hundred dollars if he would remain in the city until the exhibition and wind-up with him, Ryan refusing at the last moment to give him more than a quarter of the amount named, which Joe declared would not more than cover his expenses while here, and he consequently refused to accept. Old Mike Smith took Goss' place, and he and Ryan engaged in a very unexciting set-to. Harry Hill was master of ceremonies.

"REDDY" HOSKINS AND DONAHOE, alias "The Philadelphia Clipper," fought in a room on Ridge avenue, Philadelphia, on the night of May 16. The mill was for a purse of one hundred dollars, and gloves were dispensed with. Both young fellows are well known to frequenters of sparring exhibitions in the Quaker City, Hoskins being the smaller of the two, but decidedly the more skillful. Nine rounds were contested in forty-eight minutes, and then the seconds of Donahoe, who had the worst of it from the beginning, would not let him go to the scratch again, and against his own earnest protest the sponge was thrown up, and Hoskins declared the winner. Both men were severely pummeled, Donahoe especially showing the effects of his conqueror's pugilistic attentions.

JOHN FLOOD, who recently encountered John Sullivan, the masher from Boston Highlands, in a glove-contest near Yonkers, will shortly be the recipient of a benefit at some large hall in this city. Boxers from different cities besides the metropolis will appear on that night, and Sullivan will again meet Flood in the closing set-to. Harry Hill will be master of ceremonies, and date and location will be announced next week.

MIKE DONOVAN'S EXHIBITION at Harry Hill's, May 19, was largely attended. Those who boxed were Jerry Murphy and Jimmy Kelly, Dan Dougherty and Charley Norton, Pete Croker and brother, Fatty Rush and Tommy Geraty, English Harry and Hill's Stable-boy, Ed. McGlinchy and George Siler, and for the wind-up Donovan and George Rooke. Mike sprained the thumb of his right hand in the first of the four rounds.

JOHN SULLIVAN was expected in the metropolis on Saturday, May 21, he having promised to spar at Frank White's benefit; but, as we are informed by Billy Madden, a dispatch was received from him that afternoon to the effect that the serious illness of his mother prevented him leaving Boston.

THE TRIGGER.

NEW YORK GUN CLUB.—Members of this club engaged in two interesting contests at the grounds at Bergen Point, N. J., May 21. The first was a match shoot for the challenge cup, twenty-five birds each, thirty yards rise, eighty yards boundary, and the contestants were E. M. Hammond and Col. Butler, the former winning with a score of twenty-two to nineteen. The other event was the shoot for the Club Fund Cup, ten birds each, handicap rise, 80yds. fall, the result being as follows: E. M. Hammond (26yds.) and Hamilton (26), ten each, and in the shoot-off, miss and go out, the former won by killing three more straight; Whitehead (29), Col. Butler (29), F. P. Sands (29), and Bond (25), nine apiece; Long (26), Dexter (28), and Benjamin (22), eight; Arthur (26) and Styles (26), seven. Referee, T. J. Dolan.

AT BRINTON RANGE, N. J., a few riflemen gathered May 21 and participated in a couple of contests. The first was for a one-hundred-dollar Creedmoor rifle, 200yds., two sighting and ten scoring shots, and the result was: G. E. P. Howard, 44; C. E. Taynton, 43; T. P. White, 43; M. B. Hull, 42; J. Thomas, 41; Dr. O. Adelberg, 37. A military-rifle competition followed, same conditions, for a rifle, which was won by J. Thomas, 45; Jas. M. Dant, 42; G. E. P. Howard, 42.

DR. J. S. SCOTT was the winner of the tenth and last long-range shoot of the Winter and Spring season at the Columbia Club Range, Washington, D. C., May 21. The distances were 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, fifteen shots at each, and the leading scores were: Dr. Scott, 71, 73, 72—216; Walter Scott, 73, 74, 66—213; A. A. Adee, 71, 67, 67—205. The three best aggregate scores were: Dr. Scott, 215, 215, 216—646; Walter Scott, 207, 213, 214—634; Col. J. O. P. Burnside, 208, 210, 212—630.

A SHOTGUN was competed for by members of the Garden City Gun Club, ten birds apiece, five ground-traps, handicap rise, 80yds. fall, at Hempstead, L. I., May 18. Result: Barker, (29yds.) and Carman (28), ten each, and in the shoot-off Barker killed three more to Carman's two; G. W. Creed (29), Seaman (30), Brooks (29) and Little (28), nine apiece; Charles (28), seven.

THE BEST SCORES in a short-range military-rifle competition, 100yds., ten rounds, at Camden, N. J., May 21, were: E. Oram, 49, first; M. Price, 49, second; B. W. Cloud, 46, third; A. J. Millette, 46, fourth; G. W. Coulston, 45, fifth; R. Beck, 45, sixth; J. A. Davis, 43, seventh; L. E. French, 43, eighth.

OWING to the uncertainty of obtaining a sufficient number of wild pigeons, the managers of the Louisville Sportsmen's Association have determined to postpone their shoot to a date that will be made known through the sporting papers. Louisville proposes to have the best shoot of the year.

BATTALION TEAMS engaged in their second contest for the first Denver prize at the New Orleans (La.) Rifle Club Park May 15, each team consisting of eight men, distances 200 and 500 yards, five shots per man at each distance. Result: Washington Artillery, 281; Continental Guards, 255.

JOHN C. HASKELL is to attempt to break 500 glass balls, thrown from two Bogardus traps placed twelve feet apart, 18yds. rise, only balls broken in air to count, at Lynn, Mass., May 30. Captain Bogardus and sons will give one of their interesting exhibitions of fancy shooting.

A MATCH at pigeons, fifty each, 30yds. rise, five traps, for $100 a side, was shot at the New York Gun Club Grounds, Bergen Point, N. J., May 17, W. Wesley defeating E. G. Murphy by a score of 44 to 39.

MEMBERS of the Brooklyn Gun Club again shot for the Sharp gun May 20, R. Robinson winning by killing ten birds straight, standing at 23yds.

ON MAY 19 the members of the Binghamton Club tried their skill in breaking glass-balls. Hon. O. W. Chapman won the marksman badge, scoring 18.

BILLIARDS.

STRAY SHOTS.

 Fred Jackson, formerly with Garnier and later with Sexton in the Bowery, will have charge of the pool-table at Slosson's room during the latter's absence.

 The music composed by Wayman McCreery for his comic opera of "L'Afrique," produced at the Olympic Theatre, St. Louis, last week, is well spoken of.

 Thomas Wallace is back again in Chicago.

 Charles Bartine, well known in amusement circles, has opened a room in Connersville, Ind.

 Albert Hoa is said to be selling pools in Chicago.

 John Crehan is selling more tables this year than ever before. Philadelphia is a great field, sometimes.

 Albert Frey has been given a vacation by John F. Gleason in order that he may practice all the more industriously for his meeting with Wahlstrom, the skillful Swede.

 Charles Schaefer was in Chicago last week.

 Leo Schmid of the Brunswick & Balke Co. is due in this city from Chicago to see Troescher off for Europe.

 Charles McGlade, proprietor of the Mansion House, Atlantic City, N. J., has purchased six new Collender tables.

 On June 30 next the Brunswick & Balke Co. are to break ground for a new factory in Chicago. It will be on the North side, west of Market street, and extend from Huron to Superior street. Two buildings will be erected on the property, and it is the calculation to have them finished by July 1, 1882, at an estimated cost of $100,000. One of them will be 208x100, and the other 108x100.

 Victor Estephe defeated R. J. Hunter at the game of cushion caroms, Philadelphia, May 19. The playing was rather poor on both sides. Estephe was suffering from inflamed eyes, and therein lay Hunter's opportunity, which he failed to improve. He was 16 points ahead at one time, but was 21 behind at the finish. There was no score kept.

 Sam Baldwin's game, introduced into Mussey's room, St. Louis, and to which we made reference some months ago, is still kept a-going there, where there are a sufficient number of players of about equal skill to make it interesting.

 The ex-roomkeeper Harry Clifton on May 21 opened a new place at 34 Thirtieth street—"The Gate Tavern."

WAHLSTROM AND FREY.—Last week we stated that it was probable that these experts would play their game for the pool championship in Tammany Hall on June 2. It is now a certainty that they will do so. Frey put up the balance of his money with the official stakeholder, John D. O'Connor, on May 23, and it is probable that Wahlstrom did likewise. Frey is taking his practice breathings alternately at Knight's room and Sexton's. The Swede is practicing quietly uptown.

THE CHAMPION ABROAD.—G. F. and Leslie Slosson are by this time in London, Eng., no doubt. The City of Richmond, in which they took passage May 14, passed Crookhaven, near Queenstown, Ireland, at half-past eight o'clock on the morning of May 23.

THE TURF.

THE LOUISVILLE RACES.

The meeting of the Louisville (Ky.) Jockey Club continued May 23, when the weather was sultry, but attendance large. A three-quarter-mile-heat race, $300, opened proceedings, and was won by Knight-templar (4—107) with ease in 1:16¼, 1:16¼; Vice (3—96) second in the first heat and Gen. Pike (5—112) in the third. The Clark Stake, for three-year-olds, $100 each, $1,000 added, a mile and a quarter, was won in a canter, by the favorite, Hindoo, with Alfambra second, two lengths before Bootjack, Bend Or fourth, and Sligo fifth and last. Time, 2:10¼. The race for the Tennessee Stake for two-year-olds, $50 each, $500 added, three-quarters of a mile, was won by Babcock (109), three lengths ahead of Ballancer (100), who led Bengal (100) a length, Blenheim, Beatrice, Bayadere and Bonnie Rose passing the post in this order. Time, 1:16¾. The last event on the card was a mile dash, for all ages, $200, which was won by Liatunah (6—115) with ease; Ballast (3—93) second by two lengths, and Little Phil third. Time, 1:45. The meeting was to have closed on the following day.

COL. G. S. WELLS, president Binghamton (N. Y.) Driving Park Association, is having the old Cary Driving Park inclosed and put in fine condition. This organization hopes by making purses sufficiently large to get some of the fastest flyers there this season.

THE RACE for the French Oaks was run at Paris May 22, and was won by Serpolette III; Perplexite second and Alphonse third.

THE SHOWMAN'S DINNER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I sit at dinner most serene,
And of all care defiant,
While next to me with placid mien
Sits my Timbuctoo giant.

In front of me I gaze with pride
Upon his taller brother,
And, gently waiting by my side,
Still bigger, is another.

My Aztec Prince pours out the soup
With grace that doth astound us,
While various monsters of my troupe
Snap jewsharps all around us.

My Chinese dwarf upon my lap
Jests in his witty lingo,
And o'er his bowl of whiskey-pap
Grows red like a flamingo.

My pet Albino with pink eyes
Carves all the various fishes,
And ever doth my soul surprise
While polishing the dishes.

My sweet, three-headed Afric boy
My ways is ever chaffing,
And when one head its mouth doth cloy
The other two are laughing.

My monster who has seven legs,
And who is very able,
Advance on salary always begs
When we squat down to table.

And if I frown and answer "Nay,"
And ask for the "pertaters,"
He puts out five legs right away,
And trips up half the waiters!

While during all this gay repast,
Fit for the first four Georges,
My fat girl with a stomach vast
Perpetually gorges.

My living skeleton hath powers
That grievously alarms me,
For he enough rich food devours
To feed the Russian army.

And Washington's antique old nurse,
Who the great patriot suckled,
Is perhaps the greatest downright curse
To whom I ever truckled!

And then there is my pet giraffe,
Who each day doth grow bolder,
And who doth insolently laugh
When squinting o'er my shoulder.

But still it is so kind and true,
I sometimes like to kiss it,
Which is a blamed sight mor'n I'd do
For my played-out "What Is It!"

Thus do the days of pure delight
Go by, as I'm a sinner,
And all of us are jolly tight
Three minutes after dinner! CUPID JONES.

PART III.—EARLY LIFE OF PAPIOL THE CLOWN.

Leaning over the table near the open door, Rowena was plunged deep in thought, her face buried in her tear-stained hands. A slight noise in the corridor caused her to start up in fear. Perhaps the man she was ordered to follow would already pass by her door. No. She was mistaken. The silence of the whole floor was only disturbed by the voices of the guests in the public-room. She reseated herself, and with a long sigh allowed her thoughts to fly back to her once happy home.

Near Brighton was situated an old and noble-looking, ivy-covered castle, surrounded by fertile fields and luxuriant woods, while in the distance could be heard the soft murmuring of the sea, carried on the evening-air like some distant music of unearthly origin. In that old castle she had passed the happiest years of her life, though her guardian, Lady Margaret Bellenden, an old and rigid lady, was not exactly of an affectionate disposition.

Then he had appeared—the man she was to love. Many French people are in the habit of visiting Brighton in the Summer-time, and among them came her fate. She met him one day that he passed in front of the park-gates, while out with the hounds, and from that hour her fate was sealed. He soon managed to get himself introduced to Lady Margaret by an old gentleman he had met on the Continent, and from that day his visits became more and more frequent. Being a good English scholar, though a Frenchman, he soon managed to win his way to her heart; for the young foreigner was considered one of the handsomest men of the season, and the result was that one fine evening the spoiled beauty said to Lady Margaret:

"Lady Margaret, I should like your permission to get married."

"With that Frenchman?" asked the old gentlewoman.

"Yes."

"Then I will not give my consent."

"But I love him."

"Rowena, you are twenty-two years of age, and by the laws of our country are at liberty to marry whom you like."

"But you cannot mean ——"

"Yes, I do. The eyes of old people see things in a clearer light than you young folks, in spite of the fact that your eyes are brighter. Just listen to me. That young man does not love you. He fancies that you are rich, and ——"

"You don't know him ——"

"Yes, I do. I know that I am right. You have as much right not to believe me as you have to marry without my consent. I will only say a few words more. You must know that you have no money of your own, and all your fortune depends upon what I may leave you."

They adored each other, and they were married.

"I hope that you may be happy," were the last words that Lady Margaret addressed to her niece.

The day after the marriage they went abroad, and for a time she was very happy. One long month of pleasure was the beginning. He was always with her, and attended to her every wish. Once she happened to mention the word "Italy," and he immediately replied:

"I have fancied that you would like a visit to 'the land of song,' and so have rented a nice little villa on the shores of Lake Como."

"Suppose I was to learn French," she said one day. "Would you not like to hear me speak your own tongue?"

But he immediately replied:

"No. You would then be able to speak to other people, and I should not be the only one to enjoy your conversation."

But his "loving mood" soon changed, and one morning, as she stooped to kiss him at breakfast-time, he exclaimed, with an oath:

"Leave me alone! Don't come fooling about me."

He had just received a letter from England, and Rowena's sharp eyes caught sight of her aunt's handwriting.

What did the letter contain?

She dared not ask him, but with tears coursing down her cheeks silently took her seat at the table—but not to eat.

From that day he became less and less affectionate, seemed more thoughtful, frowned angrily at the slightest annoyance, and was absent from home the best part of the day. Poor Rowena felt that something was slowly but surely changing her husband's heart. She did not want to go to Germany, then the country of gamblers and tourists; but he entirely disregarded her wishes, and insisted that she should accompany him. Then began a life of travel, or rather flight from town to town. He arrived, gambled, won or lost, and immediately wanted to get away again.

Though in her husband's company, Rowena felt alone and neglected, and she became paler and thinner every day. What was the cause of this change of life? What had happened? In spite of her repeated questions, she could not get one word of real explanation from him. Then she grew more and more melancholy, and began to look like a woman to whom every hope and joy of life is dead forever. Then strange suspicions began to fill her mind. What was his object in following such a strange life? Who were the strange men with whom he was constantly surrounded, and to whom he spoke in whispers and evidently ordered about at his will? She knew very little German, and but a few words of French; but the strange actions of her husband were sufficient to convince her that he was not entirely free from guilt. Once she mustered up courage enough to say:

"How is it they call you 'Baron?' You did not have that title when you married me."

"I have a right to the title," was the gloomy reply.

"But why have you changed your name?"

"I have only changed a few letters here and there. But what does it matter? It is the custom to travel incognito."

She dared not question him any more, for she saw a dangerous look in his eyes that quite frightened her little stock of courage out at her fingers' ends. Though she suffered more and more, she still loved him, and had not the heart to break her bonds. Should she follow the man he had directed her to watch? Should she mix herself up in any of his dark intrigues? Yes. She felt that she must do his bidding in spite of the feeling that prompted her to disobey him. His heel was upon her heart, and she dare not move unless at his bidding.

Hark! This time she was not mistaken. She had distinctly heard a door closed with precaution. Then she heard a cautious footstep on the landing, and in another moment Papiol, looking like a tiger preparing to spring upon his enemies, passed her door and wended his way towards the staircase. Rowena hastily extinguished her light and passed out of the room. As she did so, the table creaked from the weight of her arms being taken off it, and Papiol suddenly stopped, as if turned to stone. In his right hand he had a heavy steel "knuckle-duster," and a stout life-preserver was grasped in his left. She could see him clearly, but luckily he did not catch sight of her, as she would have paid dearly for her temerity. Not hearing any more noise, Papiol silently resumed his stealthy march. Leaning against the walls for support, after the fast-disappearing form of the clown, slowly she staggered to the balusters and leaned over. Below her she could watch him descending the stairs with infinite precaution. She tried to cry out, but it seemed as if she was in some terrible nightmare, and her mouth refused to open. Then she heard him reach the first floor, enter the hall, and advance towards the front entrance. He was escaping, and she could not cry out. Making one supreme effort, she leaned over the balusters and opened her mouth to cry out her alarm-word:

"Cavagnol!"

CHAPTER III.

A ZEALOUS DETECTIVE—THE BARGAIN.

In the beer-saloon glorying in the name of the "Zum Taunus" we find the exquisite, fashionable and aristocratic Baron Armand. He had only just entered the "dive," and gazed around him as if in search of somebody. It was a low-ceilinged building, reeking with smoke and beer, crowded with steady-drinking Germans and enlivened by the strains of an ambitious orchestra composed of a drum, a cornet, a piano, a bassoon and a flute. Suddenly Armand heard a voice exclaim in French:

"Thunder! when's that beer coming? Donner-wetter, am I to die of thirst? If you don't hurry up with that beer I shall have to come and fetch it myself."

Captain Gaillonnet of the French detective police was as fat as he was high, his fat neck resembling a bull's, and his red face a danger-signal in a fog. He was a pensioned army officer, but had been many years in the employ of the French detective bureau, and considered himself a very worthy member of society.

"Good-evening, captain," said Armand, taking a seat beside the stout detective.

"What! How in thunder comes it that you consent to enter this vile beer-saloon, Baron? If you have come here to drink, you can give up all hope of that, for either the girls are all deaf or the cellar is empty. I have been shouting for beer for the last half hour, but I can't get a sup, and yet I am half dead with thirst."

The Baron coughed slightly from the effects of the smoke-laden atmosphere, and then resumed:

"I am not thirsty. I want to have a talk with you. I am sorry to say that I bring you bad news."

"Bad news?"

"Yes."

"You don't say so?"

"You are upon the point of 'getting the sack.'"

"What!"

"Exactly," nodded the Baron.

"But how can they 'sack' a captain ——"

"Stop it. Once for all, let me tell you that I know you. You are no more a captain than I am. You are a pensioned lieutenant and a member of the detective police; so you can't humbug me. What I have to say is this: you run a very good chance of losing your place."

In his astonishment the worthy detective would undoubtedly have arisen from his seat, but his rotundity of form prevented him from doing so until his surprise had considerably diminished.

"You don't mean to say that I am a paid spy?"

"'Spy' is a nasty word. But what I mean to say is that, in consideration of a sum of five hundred francs monthly, you will render the French police certain services, such as investigating letter mysteries, following certain traces and hunting up divers people.'

The worthy captain hardly knew what to say, but he managed to stammer out:

"Well, are you a baron?"

"No," replied Armand coolly.

"Well, and I am not a captain; I am a detective—and what of it?"

"Good. I like to hear a man acknowledge his little weaknesses. I want to get you out of the scrape, for, as I have already told you, you are getting into bad odor at headquarters."

"You don't mean it?"

"Yes, I do. Eight months ago you were sent for by the chief of the detective police. He gave you a passport, setting forth that you were Captain Gaillonnet; four campaigns, six wounds, and several medals."

"How did you get your information?"

"That's my business. Your instructions were to follow and arrest the younger son of a good family accused of forgery, but who did not think it worth while to stop in Paris until he was sentenced."

"His name?"

"Gineris," said Armand quietly.

"Quite right."

"I know it. Gaston Gineris, the son of one of the richest bankers in the south of France. He was condemned by default to five years' imprisonment."

"And two years of police supervision."

"Your memory is excellent. But to imprison him first of all, and then to have him under supervision, the first thing to be done was to catch him. That was what you had to do, but also what you did not do."

"It's not my fault. They fancied that he had fled to Germany, and you must remember that Germany ——"

"Is a large country. Of course, I know it was a very difficult job. I knew Gaston De Gineres in former days, and I am aware that he is a very clever rascal, and not a man to be easily caught. But you did not make any very great efforts to do so; you soon gave up the chase, and retired to this agreeable town of Homburg."

"Sir!"

"Now don't get angry. You know it's true. I can excuse you. The beer is first-class, and the women are pretty; besides, the seductive gambling-tables ——"

"I lost my last gold piece this evening."

"You shall make up for it to-morrow. But what I was going to say is, that at police-headquarters in Paris they begin to be rather astonished at your inaction, and find it rather hard that they should continue to send you money when you don't do anything for it."

"How do you know that?"

"I have friends in Paris who keep me pretty well posted. But never mind how I got my information; I am sorry to tell you that the moment is drawing near when your supplies will be cut off."

"Let me ask you one question. Do you belong to the police?"

"Perhaps I do," replied the captain, with a laugh. "And so you will be left destitute in this country, unless I save you."

"You?"

"Listen. You were ordered to arrest Gaston Gineres, a gambler, blackleg, capable of anything. His capture would have been of a certain importance, but would have reaped you but little honor. Besides, you have let the chance escape, and with my help you will accomplish a good and unexpected stroke of business, which will not only please headquarters, but will secure your promotion. In addition to this, there's a little purse of six thousand francs at the end of our enterprise. A forger is but poor game, but a murderer is a prize that is worth having."

"What!"

"You have an extradition warrant, I believe?"

"Yes."

"Giving you the right to apply for a prisoner in any part of Germany."

"Yes; from the Rhine to the Danube."

"Is the criminal's name inserted?"

"No; it was left in blank purposely. Remember that Gaston De Gineres changes names as often as he changes his shirt. Now let us go to the police-station and get four men; four will be enough; besides, I believe they only have four men, and they compose the whole army of the landgraves of Homburg. In ten minutes' time I will deliver the clown Aladin into your hands."

"The murderer of the acrobat Icarion?"

"Yes."

"Who was condemned to five years' penal servitude?"

"Exactly."

"And who escaped from the prison of Toulon about three months ago?"

"You have a very good memory."

"Why, then my fortune is made!"

"And mine will begin."

"Yours?"

"Dear Mons. Gaillonnet, do you think that I am doing this out of love for your noble self? If I offer you the chance of one important capture, you may be quite certain that it is because I expect to reap some benefit from it."

"But what good can his capture do you?"

"A great deal of good. Aladin robbed me this evening. I forgot to shut my cash-box."

"How much did he take?"

"One hundred thousand francs."

"Thunder!"

"Not a 'frederick' less."

"Have you one hundred thousand francs?"

"I had a few hours ago."

"I don't understand you."

"It is quite unnecessary that you should understand me any more than I want to recover my money."

"Of course. Well, I will secure the hundred thousand, and forward it to headquarters. After a few formalities you will regain possession of your wealth."

"That's exactly what I do not want you to do. I hate formalities, and I don't care to lose the time. I want to get my money this evening."

"It would be very irregular ——"

"Of course it would. But just allow your fancy to take an easy flight. Suppose I point out Aladin's hiding-place, and that, with the assistance of the four policemen, you secure him; then you search him, give me the money I have lost, retaining all he has in addition to the hundred thousand for yourself—and I fancy that he must have about ten thousand more—and you must acknowledge that you will have done a very nice little stroke of business."

"Of course I shall—but ——"

"Remember that I have not even given you Aladin's description, and I need not tell you that he does not wear his clown's costume. Again, he has changed his name, and otherwise completely disguised himself. You do not even know if he is in Homburg. Gaston De Gineres has escaped you, and Aladin the clown-murderer will do the same unless you brighten up a little."

"Are you sure that he has more than the hundred thousand in his possession?"

"Positive."

"Well, I agree to your proposition. Where's Aladin?"

"Don't be in a hurry. Come with me, and I will point him out to you; but remember—if you try to break our agreement, I will blow your brains out with this pistol."

At the same moment Armand pointed a deadly-looking pistol at the detective's head, and then quietly replaced the weapon in the breastpocket of his coat. The detective started so violently that he actually managed to stagger to his feet, and the fat, unwieldy man, followed by the aristocratic-looking Baron, soon left the beer-saloon.

As soon as they had reached the building that served as a barracks and police-station and many other things at the same time, the detective showed his extradition warrant to the "master of police," who politely replied:

"The army is at your disposal."

"Then I will command it, if ——"

"Hurry up!" cried the Baron impatiently.

A few minutes later "the army" was in readiness for action.

The constitutional government of the landgraves of Homburg considered one policeman as nothing at all, two policemen as of very little importance, three policemen as not much more, but four policemen, commanded by an officer, were considered and dignified with the title "an army."

This redoubtable force, destined to defend the frontiers of the principality in case of war, fulfilled less heroic duties in time of peace. It was expected to see that the beer-saloons were closed before midnight, allow rich hotels and beer-palaces to remain open as long as they liked, lock up any poor devil of a Homburger who happened to be a "little the worse" for beer, and politely show the way home to any elegantly-dressed stranger who might be staggering about the streets in a mad state of intoxication; these were their nocturnal exploits.

In the daytime it was a real pleasure to see these five warriors going and coming up and down the streets of the capital in their neat white uniforms and superb martial bearing, keeping step in the most military manner possible, and captivating the hearts of hundreds of nurse-girls, cooks and chambermaids.

The "Government gambler-contractor" had agreed that he should support "the troop," and soon even "the army" of Homburg owed its existence to rouge-et-noir.

"Forward! march!" commanded Captain Gaillonnet, and in a few minutes "the army" were in front of the Hotel d'Angleterre.

"Come! quick!" said the Baron.

"Shall we take the men with us?"

"Yes."

"Follow us, you soldiers."

The front door was open, and as "the army" marched up the steps the doorkeeper nearly fell from his seat with surprise and admiration.

"Has anything happened this evening?" asked the Baron.

"Nothing," replied the stupefied doorkeeper.

"No noise, no quarrel?"

"No."

"Is there anybody in the public-room?"

"Yes; there are some gentlemen still there. They have been drinking for a long time."

So it was all right. Aladin had not even attempted to escape. He had treated the Baron's threats with contempt, or else fancied it imprudent to try and escape. Followed by Captain Gaillonnet and the army, the Baron sprang upstairs. His heart beat violently and his eyes glared with triumph. One hundred thousand francs almost within his grasp; it should be the foundation of his fortune. A few steps more and Aladin would be seized by the throat by Gaillonnet, and by the pockets by himself, Sergine. Ordinarily so cool and calm, the Baron stretched out his hands with feverish impatience, as if to grasp the coveted gold.

"Here's the door," he cried eagerly, as he arrived before Papiol's room.

"Halt!" commanded the captain.

The rifles of the army rang through the house as they "grounded" together upon the polished oak floor.

"Open in the name of the law!" cried the captain.

Not a sound came from Papiol's room.

"Break in the door!" cried the Baron impatiently.

At a sign from the captain, the army poised their rifles with one accord, ready to smash through the wooden barrier that separated them from the enemy.

Suddenly behind Armand they heard a light, quick footstep, and Rowena, pale and trembling, said to her husband in a broken voice:

"Armand, it is useless to break in that door. The man who occupied the room is no longer there."

With an oath, he caught her up in his arms and carried her to her own apartment.

CHAPTER IV.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—NEARLY A MURDER.

As soon as they were alone in their own room, and the door closed upon them, he seized hold of her wrists and cried in a low, fierce voice:

"What did you dare to say?"

"You hurt me! Let me go!"

He released her, and said with a terrible oath:

"Speak!"

Poor Rowena sank almost fainting to the floor.

"I mean that the man you told me to watch has left the house," she stammered faintly.

"Did you follow him?"

"Yes."

"Then he is in Cavagnol's custody downstairs?" he cried eagerly.

"No. He is far away from here by this time."

"Wretch! Did you not call out?"

"I tried to," she murmured; "I swear that I wanted to, but I remained powerless upon the staircase, my arms hanging over the balusters and utterly unable to pronounce the name of Cavagnol. I heard the front door close and the man's footsteps in the street; but it was too late to give the alarm. You must remember that I am very weak; women are subject to attacks of weakness. Besides, what you had ordered me to do was really a terrible thing; it was spying, denouncing, and I could not do it. Why do you mix yourself up in such dark intrigues? You see, I was right when I fancied you wished to harm that man; or else why did you bring the soldiers with you?"

She staggered to her feet and sought refuge in a corner of the room, for her husband's look was so fierce and terrible that she feared for her life. His face was blood-red with passion, and his eyes resembled two balls of fire. With a furious oath he followed her up, and lifted his fist as if to dash out her brains.

"Are you going to kill me?" she cried.

"I don't know," he replied, with a storm of oaths.

He had placed his hand upon her shoulder, and continued to gaze fiercely into her eyes as he hissed:

"You have ruined me! I wanted money, a great deal of money, so as not to be dishonored here the same as I am elsewhere. I was upon the point of getting rich, I was nearly saved, I almost had a fortune in my hand, and you have ruined me. Thanks to you, that man carried away a fortune that was almost mine. And so you want to make your virtue and honesty a stumbling-block in my path? If I go to prison, it will be your fault. If my head is cut off, my blood will be upon your hands."

She was panting with excitement, and tried to run away from him; but he dragged her into the middle of the room, and forced her upon her knees.

"Don't be frightened! I won't kill you. I hate you too much for that. Death has no terrors for you, since you believe in God and have a clear conscience. And so when I want to climb you hold on to my leg! Our marriage is a convict-prison, and you are the 'ball' attached to my ankle. I will be terribly revenged upon you—but I will not kill you. You love me, don't you? Well, listen; I don't love you. I saw a girl at the Kurhaus this evening, a blonde, and she pleases me. Her name is Marie La Troque. I touched her foot under the table as she was seated at play. If I had managed to secure Aladin's money, I should have taken supper with her this evening. I don't like brunettes—remember that!"

"Kill me! kill me!" murmured the unfortunate woman.

"No! I am not brutal. Why do you tremble? I am speaking to you very quietly. We are like two friends having a nice little chat. Up to this moment I have always lied to you; now I am going to tell you the truth. Get up! Sit down! I have a great deal to say to you."

He dragged her towards a chair, forced her to sit down, took a seat in front of her, bowed mockingly, and with a cruel smile upon his lips continued:

"What is more, I have never loved you. What a fool you were to believe what I told you in England! The truth is that I had got into serious trouble in France, and was almost penniless; so, of course, I wanted to 'marry money.' Though Lady Margaret was opposed to our marriage, I fancied that the old fool would relent some day or other. I was mistaken; nothing can beat the determination of those old English bluebloods. And so I found myself in a nice pickle; I had the bother of a wife, but had not the pleasure of her money. You took me in famously."

She looked at him in mute despair, hardly knowing or caring if she was alive or dead.

"Of course," he continued, "I soon began to hate you. You were not only poor, but you were in my way. I could not speak to you of anything. I saw that you were burdened with that foolish appendage a conscience. I take great pleasure in telling you all this; first, because you suffer; and secondly, because it takes a load off my mind. Cry, sob, tear your hair out; you are the wife of a rogue. The shame that this knowledge will cause you is my revenge for the misery I owe you. Your husband is a cheating gambler, a thief, a forger—yes, a forger. The money of other people belongs to me. I am a spider's web, always stretched to catch fools. I have accomplices everywhere. I am like a robber-chief; true, I do not stop people upon the highway, because those days are past; but I am all the more terrible because I am elegant and cunning. I am a gentlemanly Maudrin, a gloved Shinderhannes. You are Mme. Shinderhannes and Mme. Maudrin. In spite of your silks and laces, you are only the cantiniere of a band of bandits. What you are you will not cease to be. You are chained to my intrigues, falsehoods and thefts, the same as I am to your poverty and miserable conscience. The day that I am tried for some of my crimes—perhaps I have already been that way—you shall take your seat beside me in the prisoner's box, and I will look at you tenderly and speak to you in a low voice, so that it may be perfectly understood that you are my accomplice."

She now arose from her seat, calm and dignified, pale but beautiful.

"No, you will not," she said in a clear voice; "for you must either kill me this evening, or I leave the hotel this evening."

"Oh, no!" he replied with a smile, "death would deliver you. I would not touch you with the point of a pin. I want you alive and with me, so that you may suffer as much as possible. Rowena, you have a master."

But Rowena seemed to grow more and more calm every moment, and she continued in such a cool and determined manner that he was forced to listen to her in spite of himself.

TO BE CONTINUED.

BASEBALL.

CHICAGO vs. WORCESTER.

The Chicagos and Worcesters again met on the former's ground May 17, when Gore reappeared at centre field for the home-team. The Worcesters outplayed their opponents at all points, and secured a noteworthy victory by their heavy batting in the last four innings. In the first five innings the visitors made but three hits, and failed to score a run. The Chicagos were unable to bat Richmond's pitching, getting but four safe hits. Dickerson did the best batting, while Creamer excelled in fielding.

The third game between these clubs was played May 18 at Chicago, Ill., and attracted about 2,500 spectators. Goldsmith took Corcoran's place as pitcher, and Flint resumed his position as catcher of the home-team. Richmond was hit hard, especially in the seventh inning, when six safe hits, including clean home-runs by Burns and Flint, yielded six runs to the Chicagos. Corey pitched in the eighth inning, relieving Richmond, who was batted out of his position for the first time this season. The Worcesters fielded poorly, and failed to bunch their hits.

PROVIDENCE vs. BUFFALO.

The second game between the above-named clubs was played May 18 at Buffalo, N. Y., having been postponed by rain from the day preceding. The weather was cold and threatening and the attendance small. Morrisey laid off, and Rowe guarded third base for the home-team, while the visitors presented the same nine as before, Radbourn and Mathews, however, exchanging positions. The Buffalos bunched their six safe hits in the second and seventh innings, when, aided by a miss of a third strike and a wild throw by Gross, they scored five runs. Denny's three-baser in the second and single in the eighth yielded two runs to the visitors, and they added four more on Start's single, York's two-bagger, and errors by Galvin, Force, White, Foley and Peters. The visitors thus won by their superior fielding. Denny's third-base play was the chief feature.

The third Buffalo-Providence game was played May 19 at Buffalo, N. Y., before about five hundred spectators. The visitors bunched their hits in three innings, and scored eleven runs, seven earned. Galvin was forced to retire from the pitcher's position in the sixth inning, and Foley took his place, O'Rourke going to first base. The Buffalos repeatedly filled the bases, but failed to bat at the needed point. The fielding was fair, McClellan and Force especially distinguishing themselves. Gilligan caught and Gross played right field for the visitors. The weather was again cold and threatening.

DETROIT vs. TROY.

The Detroits blanked the Troys May 17 at Detroit, Mich., thanks to Derby's effective pitching and the fine fielding of the home-team. Keefe took Welch's place as pitcher, and was hit hard, especially in the ninth inning, when safe hits by Hanlon, Knight, Bennett and Brown earned two runs for the Detroits. A base on called balls given Houck, a fumble by Hankinson and a three-baser by Knight yielded the other two runs credited to the home-team. Houck made a brilliant running catch, that prevented the Troys from scoring in the sixth inning. The catching of Bennett and Ewing was noteworthy.

The Troys turned the tables on the Detroits May 18, when they met for the third time this season. The visitors bunched their hits in the second and fifth innings, and, aided by costly errors by Knight, Hanlon and Gerhardt, scored seven runs. The Detroits led off with two unearned runs, but failed to score afterwards. Score:

The Clevelands have reorganized their nine. McGeary resigned on account of internal strife and jealousy among the men. C. M. Smith of last year's Cincinnatis is mentioned as likely to fill the vacant position at third base, while Clapp is to captain the nine. Remsen, once well known as an outfielder, has also been engaged.

BOSTON vs. CLEVELAND.

The Bostons defeated the Clevelands May 17 at Cleveland, O., after another close and exciting contest. Nolan took Purcell's place at centre field with the home-nine, who took the lead at the outset by making two runs on four safe hits. A two-bagger by Crowley and singles by Barnes and Morrill enabled the Bostons to tie the score in the fourth inning, and singles by Whitney and Crowley in the fifth yielded the winning run to the visitors. The weather was cold and damp, and only three hundred people were present.

The Bostons secured their third successive victory over the Clevelands May 18, after a close contest, requiring ten innings. McGeary, captain and third-baseman of the home-team, did not play, as he had asked for his release, and Nolan covered third base in his stead, while Purcell resumed his position at centre field. The Bostons secured one run in the first inning on Barnes' two-bagger and Dunlap's fumble. The Clevelands scored two runs in the second on singles by Glasscock and Dunlap, and Barnes' miss. The Bostons tied the score in the ninth inning on Nolan's fumble and Richmond's safe hit, and made the winning run in the tenth, when Whitney got first on balls, went to third on Snyder's out and Glasscock's wild throw, and came home on Hornung's hit. Morrill was taken sick, and Deasley played first base after the sixth inning.

Championship contests of the rival California Leagues were played May 8 at, respectively, San Francisco and Oakland. The Knickerbockers and Athletics were the contestants at the Recreation Grounds in the former city. The game, remarkable only for heavy batting, was won by the Knickerbockers by 19 to 11. Smith and Angus of the Knickerbockers made home-runs in the second inning. The game at Oakland between the Oaklands and Mystics, although more closely contested, was not marked by any particularly brilliant playing on the part of either club. The Oaklands outbatted their opponents, and won by a score of 9 to 8. Redmond pitched very effectively for the winners, but four safe hits being made off him.

Baseball in New Orleans.—After four unsuccessful attempts, the R. E. Lees and Crescents on May 18 played their first game for the championship of the Crescent City. The Lees, captained by Denny Mack, a well-known Philadelphia professional, secured an easy victory by a score of 10 to 1. Brennan's catching was the chief feature. The Arlingtons—the champion junior nine—were defeated by the Mitchels the same afternoon, the score standing 10 to 9 at the end of ten innings. It is said that the Crescents have since disbanded, and four of their players have joined the Lone Stars.

The College Championship.—The first game between Dartmouth and Amherst was played May 18 on the former's ground, at Hanover, N. H. Rundlett and Cram resumed their old positions of pitcher and catcher for the Dartmouths, for the first time this year. A drizzling rain stopped play several times during the game, which was finally won by the Dartmouths by 11 to 10. The Brown-Yale championship contest at Providence, R. I., same afternoon, was stopped by rain at the end of the fourth inning, the score standing tied at 4. The Dartmouths defeated the Yales by 6 to 3 on May 21, at Springfield, Mass.

The season in St. Louis, Mo., was inaugurated May 15 by a game between the rival Reds and the Browns of that city. A miss on strikes, followed by safe hits by W. Gleason and McSorley, allowed one of the Browns to cross the home-plate in the third inning, and this proved to be the only run scored. The finish was very exciting, the Reds, who had three men on the bases before they had a man out, failing to get in the coveted run.

Reccius' remarkable pitching enabled the Eclipses of Louisville, Ky., to defeat the Gymnasium Club of Cincinnati, O., May 15, on the former's ground, by a score of 11 to 0. The visitors failed to make a safe hit. These clubs played again on the following afternoon, when the Eclipses were credited with another victory, the figures being 11 to 4.

The Troys talk of going to Pittsburg, Pa., a proposition having been made to them to locate there. It is understood that the Troys are perfectly willing to change their base, being dissatisfied with their treatment in Troy.

W. Taylor of Chicago, who pitched for the Californias of San Francisco last season and was recently appointed a League umpire, has been engaged by the Worcester Club as a substitute. He is said to be a good general player.

The Williams and Union College nines contended May 19 at Williamstown, Mass. The Unions, who won by 13 to 2, had the services of Mountain, whose pitching puzzled the Chicagos on one notable occasion last season.

The Washingtons have released Trott, their catcher, and engaged Reipschlager in his stead. They have also dropped Cronin, who hails from Boston, and was highly recommended as a second-baseman.

The Orange Club have organized with a strong local nine, and would like to hear from all clubs in this city and vicinity. All communications should be sent to Chas. V. Fischer, Orange, N. J.

The Dumoulin Club of Brooklyn would like to hear from all amateur clubs. Address C. Dumoulin, 191 Meserole street, Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.

CANINE CONTROVERSIES.

Two pitched battles between fighting canines took place at a pit on Long Island on the afternoon of May 17. The first was between the imported white dog Peter, owned in Brooklyn, and Patsey, a black brindle from Boston, the stakes being $250 a side. The Brooklyn dog was the favorite, and he won in 33min., Patsey refusing to scratch. The second was between Ike, white with yellow and tan patches on head, belonging to the owner of Patsey, and Louise, a white dog from Newark, N. J., each weighing sixteen pounds. The latter's fighting record is excellent, and caused her to be made a strong favorite, but the Boston dog proved her master, punishing her terribly, and causing her to give it up at the end of 1h. 17m. The stakes were the same as in the previous match. On the night of the 18th another encounter took place, the contestants being Patsey Boliver of Boston and Goody of Washington, D. C., the weight stipulated in the articles being 40lb each. Goody had the call in the betting, and for some time he had the best of the chawing; but then the tables were turned, and in fifty-three minutes Boliver was given the fight. Stakes, $600.

AQUATIC.

THE NORTHWESTERN REGATTA.

From the report of the committee appointed by the Northwestern Amateur Boating Association to fix upon the location of the next annual regatta we take the following extract, giving information concerning Diamond Lake, Cass County, Mich., the place selected:

The lake is very conveniently situated to the air-line of the Michigan Central and Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroads, which pass through the hotel ground a short distance from that part of the lake where it is proposed to locate the start and build a temporary boat-house; is about two miles long and 1¼ miles wide; has a first-class 1½-miles course, perfectly straight and wide enough to admit of all the boats being sent off together in the different races. The start will be about 300 feet from the boat-house; an island in the centre of the lake will afford an admirable view of the races; there is no current, and the water is sheltered by high banks and a heavy growth of timber, thus forming a straight, land-locked, currentless course, so long desired by the Association. We believe that it is a desirable locality for the regatta, not only because the place affords all that is needed to make the same successful, but also from its location, which enables us to reach a section of the country not heretofore attending regattas. There is no place that can be so readily reached, and has such a commanding position in southern Michigan, northern Indiana and Illinois, and which has the boating facilities, as Diamond Lake, being in addition thereto the favorite Summer resort for the sections named and Chicago and its surroundings.

In the contract signed by Fred G. Moon and J. C. Moon, and guaranteed by Nathan Corwith and P. P. Smith of Chicago said parties agree to give the Association thirty gold individual badges, to cost $650; do all necessary advertising; put up a temporary boat-house, with floats; provide buoys; pay all local expenses; provide free transportation to and from Diamond Lake for all contestants, boats and the executive board over the Michigan Central and Chicago and Grand Trunk Railways; furnish the executive board with board and lodging; give the Association $100 in cash; build a grand-stand to accommodate at least 1,000 people; provide a suitable steamer for the officers of the Association; give competing oarsmen reduced rates for board; and do all in their power to make the regatta a success.

LOUISIANA ROWING CLUB.

The fourth annual regatta of this club took place on Bayou St. John, at New Orleans, on Tuesday afternoon, May 17. The weather was everything that could be asked, and the turn-out of both sexes large. The result of the several races was as follows: Junior wherry-race, a half-mile with a turn—First heat: George Pillsbury first, in 5m. 34s.; A. Boze second. Second heat: Thos. H. MANHATTAN vs. STATEN ISLAND.

The first cricket match of the season—club vs. club—in this vicinity, took place at Staten Island on May 19, the contesting teams being the first eleven of the Manhattan Club, and the best first eleven the Staten Island Club could raise for the match, the absentees being Messrs. Harvey, Moore, Rankin, Mylie, Roberts and Stevens. The weather was rainy in the morning, and the clubs had to play on a wet and dead wicket; but in the afternoon it cleared up. The Manhattans were early on the ground, ready to play at the appointed hour. It was nearly noon, however, before the game began, the Islanders being able to send only nine men to the bat in the first inning, and but ten in the second. On this account the contest was one-sided, the visitors having no difficulty in defeating their opponents in one inning. Hooper and Cleverly leading the bowling on each side. Scott's wicket-keeping and a fine catch by Kessler were the fielding features of the contest. The score gives further particulars:

An eleven of the Pennsylvania Hospital were victorious in a game with the Cheltenham Club, the respective totals being 70 and 23 to 36 and 27. The second eleven of the Keystone Club proved too much for the first eleven of the Alerts, winning by 46 to 32, the score of the first inning. The second elevens of the Young Americas and Merions contended at Ardmore, the result being in favor of the former by a score of 118 to 38, only one inning being played. The second elevens of the Girards and Merions also met. The Girards won, with nine wickets to spare, by the respective totals of 49 and 30 to 28 and 48. The first elevens of the Belmont and Oxford Clubs were to have played at Frankford, but the former failed to put in an appearance.

PRINCETON vs. TRINITY.

The first of the series of intercollegiate cricket matches for the championship and a prize tankard presented by Philadelphia cricketers was played on the Staten Island Club grounds May 21, that club having on that occasion placed their field at the disposal of the Princetons. It was the first time Princeton has ever placed a cricket eleven in the field, and a very creditable victory, with six wickets to spare, marked the inaugural game of the college club. The weather was propitious, the clubs were early on the field, and the game was quickly played to a finish, the chief feature being the really excellent fielding which was shown by both elevens. DEATH OF A CRICKETER.—Chas. C. Walden, who died May 20 at his residence in Flatbush, Long Island, was an esteemed member of the old Brooklyn Cricket Club. He also played baseball, and was one of the nine of the Nationals of Washington in 1866. He was also one of the American Club eleven of Brooklyn, in which Creighton and the late Gen. Dakin were players.

THE LONGWOOD CLUB of Boston, Mass., are now playing a series of games in Philadelphia, Pa. Their opening game was with the Germantowns, who occupied the wickets during May 23, and made 163 runs in their first inning. W. C. Morgan, 3d, W. C. Morgan Jr. and Brown were the principal run-getters, with 44, 29 and 22 respectively.

THE HARVARD ELEVEN visited Concord, N. H., May 21, and defeated the St. Paul's School eleven by a score of 117 to 81 in a one-inning game. Norley, the professional of the Harvards, batted excellently for 39, and was well seconded by Brewster, who made 34. Blair and Howard hit hard for St. Paul's, each making 22.

MANHATTAN vs. GIRARD.—The Manhattan Club will send the following team to Philadelphia at 8 A. M. on Monday, May 30, to play the Girard Club at Harrowgate, viz., Messrs. Hooper, Hosford, Greig, Makin, Dr. Hulbert, Geo. Scott, Sprague, Capt. White Garbutt, and their two professionals, Smith and Emmett.

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The close of the third week of the Western tour of the Eastern teams leaves the Worcesters in the van, with the Chicagos second and the Bostons third, Troy being at the foot. This week the Eastern teams play their last games of their first tour, Boston playing in Detroit, Providence in Chicago, the Worcesters in Cleveland and the Troys in Buffalo. The record up to May 24, inclusive, is as follows:

	Boston.	Buffalo.	Chicago.	Cleveland.	Detroit.	Providence.	Troy.	Worcester.	Won.

THE COLLEGE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The success of the Harvard nine and the marked falling-off in the play of Yale—judging from recent results—are the topic of interest in the College championship arena at present, the record up to date, May 24, placing Harvard in the van with a decidedly winning lead, Dartmouth standing second, with Yale, Princeton and Amherst even for third place, and Brown last. The record is:

	Amherst.	Brown.	Dartmouth.	Harvard.	Princeton.	Yale.	Won.
Amherst	..	1	0	0	0	0	1
Brown	0	..	1	0	0	0	1
Dartmouth	1	1	..	0	0	1	3

Princeton	0	0	1	0	..	0	1
Yale	0	0	0	0	1	..	1
Lost	2	3	4	0	2	2	13

On Saturday, May 28, the Harvards play their return match with the Yales at New Haven. Yale claims that the employment of an unofficial umpire in the Harvard and Amherst and Harvard and Princeton games forfeits those games.

WORCESTER vs. BUFFALO.

The above-named clubs met for the first time this season May 20 at Buffalo, N. Y. Richmond was suffering with a sore finger, and Corey took his place as pitcher for the Worcesters, and Stovey resumed his position at first base, after being laid up for several days with a sprained ankle. The Buffalos pounded Corey hard, earning six of their seven runs, while the Worcesters could not do anything with Galvin's pitching, gaining but three hits and experiencing their first whitewash. But one of the Worcesters reached second base. The Buffalos fielded faultlessly, Force's second-base play being the chief feature. The hitting was about evenly divided among the local nine, White and Foley leading in the matter of total bases. The weather was cold, and about six hundred people were present.

These clubs met again at Buffalo, N. Y., May 21, when the above result was reversed. The visitors substituted Richmond for Corey in the pitcher's position, and the change worked well, O'Rourke alone hitting him with any effect. Taylor took Stovey's place with the Worcesters, and Lynch was substituted for White the Buffalos. The visitors on this occasion found Galvin easy to hit, and worked him out in two innings. Lynch pitched the next two innings, and was driven out of the position, the Worcesters batting him for five hits and five runs in the fourth. Galvin then pitched the remainder of the game, and, being better backed up, the Worcesters failed to increase their score. The Worcesters again fielded finely, while the Buffalos played poorly in the field. O'Rourke hit safely each of the four times he went to the bat.

THE BRADFORD (Pa.) CLUB have arranged a game with the Detroits on the latter's trip East, and expect the Boston, Troy, Chicago and Worcester Clubs in June and July, and the Providence and Cleveland later in the season. The Bradford's nine at present consists of Phillips, pitcher; Lane, catcher; Dickson, Ellis and Spangler on the bases; Guise, short-stop; and Reynolds, Wilson and Johnson in the outfield.

AHERN, a well-known semi-professional player of Troy, N. Y., is a "student" again, filling a position on the baseball nine of the Union College of Schenectady. The Unions won the championship of the New York College Association last season, when it was alleged that their nine were mostly made up of the Daly Club of Troy, including Ahern as catcher.

THERE IS A LETTER in care of this office for J. Kelly, manager of the New York B. B. C.

CHICAGO vs. BOSTON.

The opening game between the Chicagos and Bostons was played May 20 at Chicago, Ill., and was won by the home-team, thanks to an alleged inefficient umpire. The Chicagos presented their strongest nine on this occasion, while the Bostons were weakened by the unavoidable absence, through illness, of Morrill, their captain and first-baseman. The Bostons led off with three runs in the first inning, when Crowley and Barnes got their bases on errors, and came home on Richmond's three-bagger, the latter also scoring on Burdock's out. Another three-baser by Richmond sent home Barnes, who had hit safely in the sixth inning, and ended the run-getting for the Bostons. The Chicagos scored their first run in the fourth inning on Kelly's two-baser, Williamson's single and Crowley's error, and took the lead in the seventh. Flint opened with a hit, Quest flew out, Dalrymple hit over right-field fence for two bases, Gore was given a base on balls, and the bases were full; Kelly hit to left and brought Flint and Dalrymple home, Kelly going to second; Anson hit to Burdock, who juggled it, but managed to recover in time to put the batsman out at first. Gore tallied. The umpire was giving his entire attention to the play at first, and Kelly, coming from second, seeing this, cut across the corner without touching third, and scored what proved to be the winning run. The claim was made by the Bostons that Kelly's run should not be counted; but the umpire did not see the play, and consequently allowed he run.

The Chicagos and Bostons met again at Chicago, Ill., May 21, when Goldsmith and Bond pitched for their respective clubs. The home-team batted Bond freely, earning all of their four runs, and only the best of fielding prevented them from making more runs. The Bostons played finely in the field, Whitney's muff of a thrown ball being the only error. They could get but three hits off Goldsmith, and were indebted to errors by Flint, Quest and Goldsmith for the two runs made. There were about 3,000 people present. Score:

CLEVELAND vs. TROY.

The first game between the Clevelands and Troys was played May 20 at Cleveland, O., and was witnessed by 500 people. Clapp reappeared with the home-nine, playing left field, while Moynahan guarded third base and Nolan took McCormick's place as pitcher. The visitors bunched their hits in two innings, when they earned four runs. In the seventh the Clevelands gained a good lead by superior batting, Purcell's three-bagger to right-centre bringing in three runs, Keefe was batted very freely, five of the seven runs credited to the Clevelands being earned. Dunlap batted and fielded finely.

These clubs met again May 21, when the Clevelands saved themselves from being blanked and secured another victory by a streak of good batting in the last two innings. McCormick and Welch reappeared in the pitcher's position for their respective clubs. The Troys earned three runs by good batting in the sixth and eighth innings, and thus secured a lead, which was wrested from them, however, in the ninth, when hits by Glasscock, Phillips and Shaffer, and errors by Hankinson and Cassidy, yielded three runs and the victory to the Clevelands. Shaffer's batting was noteworthy:

O'LEARY INTERNATIONAL BELT.

The second competition for this trophy is in progress as we write, having commenced at Madison-square Garden, this city, at 12.05 A. M. on Monday, May 23. In consequence of the way in which previous similar contests during the present year had fizzled out, it had been thought by many that public interest in long-distance pedestrian races had lessened to such an extent that the present affair must prove another failure from lack of patronage. It was therefore surprising to see so large an assemblage in the Garden when the race opened, especially in view of the fact that the weather throughout Sunday evening was very unfavorable, probably over three thousand being present when the word "Go!" was pronounced. The interest in the contest, too, was such that a very large proportion of the spectators remained until far into the morning, and daylight still saw many present. Before noon the building was, of course, well-nigh deserted by all who had no duty to perform there; but in the afternoon people began to arrive again, and in the evening there was a crowd unusually large for a Monday night. This was due to the fact that the pedestrians were doing first-class work, previous records having been eclipsed during the earlier hours, while the members of the leading division were making a fine race, and appeared likely to continue to do so throughout the week. The general arrangements within the Garden are much the same as in previous events of this character. An excellent track, made of loam and sawdust, of the usual width and length, is laid, the contestants are provided with small wooden houses, placed side by side at the east end of the building, and the track is surrounded by a stout rail, while a picket-fence separates it from the inner circle. The scoring is done in the same manner as before, sheet-scorers checking lapmen in charge of the dials, and the miles as made being placed opposite the names of the contestants on a big blackboard. The men employed on the sheets are members of the Pastime and Aztec Athletic Clubs, being amateur athletes who have by experience become familiar with their duties, while Edward Plummer has general charge of the work. The referee is F. A. Steimer; and Barney Wood, proprietor of Wood's Athletic Grounds, Williamsburg, L. I., and James Smith have been appointed by the pedestrians to look after their interests financially and otherwise. We neglected to mention above that the management engaged the cornet-soloist Levy as a special attraction for the "sacred concert" which preceded the race, paying a good round sum for the luxury. The fourteen men who started were as follow: John Hughes, George Hazael, George Littlewood, John Sullivan, John Cox, Robert Vint, Patrick Fitzgerald, Eph Clow, H. F. Brown, Dennis Donovan, Ben Curran, Harry Howard, George Dufrane and P. Dalton. The veteran Curran bounded off with the lead, and finished the first circuit of the track several yards ahead of his competitors. Then light-haired, boyish-looking Littlewood, Tom Davis' importation, assumed command, completing the first mile in 5min. 50sec., Sullivan five seconds behind him, and Hughes third, in 6m. 10s. Two miles were finished by Littlewood in 12m. 11s., and by Curran in 12m. 13s. The pace continued very hot, Littlewood running five miles in 30min., with Hazael, who was not putting on all steam, as he usually does, second, in 31m. 15s. Hughes third, Clow fourth, Sullivan fifth and Curran sixth. Fitzgerald, generally one of the leaders during the early part of a race, did not travel with his customary dash. Hazael's previous best-on-record for one hour, 9 miles 735yds., was beaten by Littlewood, who covered 9 miles 1,395yds., while in two hours the latter scored 18 miles 1,630yds., the best previous record being Hazael's 17 miles 1,543yds. Hughes was third man. This rate of progression was altogether too rapid for such a race, and the folly displayed by Littlewood in allowing Hazael to force him along this way was generally remarked. As had been expected, at the end of three hours the Sheffielder came back and Hazael took the lead, Littlewood going second until the fifth hour, when Hughes exchanged places with him. They ran in this way until eight hours were left behind, when Hughes got in front, where he remained up to about 10:45 o'clock on the morning of the second day, when he was passed while resting by Vint, who at noon or thirty-six hours from starting had exactly three miles the best of the lot. Vint had run into second position before noon on the first day, exchanged with Littlewood on the fourteenth hour, and held on to the place up to the time he gained first place, which he had by over eight miles when our latest returns were received. Below we present a table showing the distances accomplished by the first five men at the end of each hour up to six o'clock P. M. Tuesday, or forty-two hours from the start:

Those who had fallen out of the race up to the time of closing our forms were H. F. Brown, who retired at 9 A. M. 23, with but 29¾ miles to his credit; P. Dalton, at 6.27 A. M., with 27¾ miles; John Cox, at 9.40 A. M., having accomplished but 40¾ miles. It was the first long-distance race in which either of the two former engaged, and they were not expected to stay the week out. Cox's performance was disappointing, although it was well understood that he had a bad foot—a result of the race in January last at the American Institute. At this time the contest is a very open one.

DECORATION-DAY SPORTS.

Monday next, May 30, will be devoted to the work, so fraught with sad memories, of strewing with tear-watered Spring flowers the graves of those who lost their lives that the Union might be preserved. The occasion being generally observed as a holiday, it has been selected by different athletic organizations as a suitable date upon which to hold competitive meetings. In this vicinity the New York A. C. will hold their Spring games at Mott Haven, N. Y.; the Manhattan A. C. will have theirs at the grounds corner Eight avenue and Fifty-sixth street; the Orion R. and A. A. will do likewise at Caledonian Park, Baldwin avenue and High street, Jersey City Heights, N. J.; and the Scottish-American of Jersey City will meet at their grounds, Erie, Ninth and Tenth streets, there. The Massacusetts Institute of Techology A. C. will also hold a meeting then at Boston, Mass., having been compelled to postpone their games from May 27 because Beacon Park could not be obtained on the latter date. At the N. Y. A. C. meeting fourteen events will be decided, the prizes for which are gold medals worth $30 to first and ten dollar gold medals to second, the winners, however, having the privilege, if desired, of receiving instead of medals an order for some souvenir of equal value in either jewelry, silverware, or fancy goods, on designated manufacturers. In addition, any competitor, by notifying the secretary, can compete for a gold best-on-record medal. For the five-mile professional run to take place at the S. A. A. C. of J. C. meeting the following entries have so far been received: John Raine, Charles Price, James McLeavy, Phil. Mignault, Cutty Smith, Fleming and several others. Entries will remain open until the day of the race, and can be made to Thomas McBride, 133 Newark avenue, Jersey City.

THE ANNUAL GYMNASIUM EXHIBITION at Princeton (N. J.) College took place May 21, and was participated in by F. G. Landon, '81; H. B. Welles, '81; John Larkin, '82; Wm. P. Toler, '82; W. H. Wills, '82; C. S. Day, '83; D. K. E. Fisher, '83; G. R. Fleming, '83; Oliver Harriman, '83; F. E. Hoskins, '83; J. G. Murdock, '83; and R. St. John, '83. They went through the usual gymnastic performances, including a number of very difficult feats, in a manner which bore testimony to the ability of their instructor, George Goldie, who has been the college physical professor for a number of years, and doubtless will be for years to come. The prizes were awarded as follow: For general gymnastics, Welles; heavy-weight, Toler; light-weight, Hoskins; horizontal bar, Murdock; parallel bars, R. St. John. Judges—Frank Dunning, Wm. R. Wilder and D. P. Withington. The exhibition was witnessed by a large number of relatives and friends of the students.

LAWN-TENNIS ASSOCIATION.—Thirty-five clubs were represented at a convention held at the Fifth-avenue Hotel, this city, May 21, for the purpose of organizing a permanent association, to be known as the United States Lawn-tennis Association, adopting a code of playing rules and selecting a standard ball to be used in all matches between clubs belonging thereto. A constitution and by-laws were adopted, as were the All-England Lawn-tennis rules of 1881, and the executive committee were empowered to select the style of ball to be used by the Association in all matches and tournaments. The following officers were elected: President, Gen. R. S. Oliver, Albany, N. Y.; vice-president, Samuel Campbell, Orange, N. J.; secretary and treasurer, Clarence M. Clark, Philadelphia; executive committee, James Dwight of Boston, G. S. Scolfield Jr. of Staten Island, and Berkley Moston, New York City.

POSTPONEMENT.—The Schuylkill Navy athletic games, which were booked for Decoration-day, May 30, have been indefinitely postponed, on account of the committee's failure to obtain the proper grounds and track for the occasion. This action of the Board will disappoint a large majority of the members who had intended entering for the various contests. The postponement, however, is unavoidable. The committee did all in their power to arrange for holding the games, but found it impossible to construct the proper kind and quality of track, etc., in so short a time.

THE ANNUAL FIELD SPORTS of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium of Philadelphia will be held on Saturday, June 11, at the New Hunting Park track, under the supervision of Prof. Barrett. The prizes offered will be silver cups and badges. Entries close on June 9. Events: 220yds, run, handicap; one-quarter mile run, handicap; one-half mile run, handicap; 75yds. run, for all boys under fifteen years; pole-vaulting, mile walk, mile walk for professionals.

THE ENTRIES for the third All-United States 135yds. handicap, to take place under the management of Clark Gormley and Dawson at the Lamb Tavern track, Philadelphia, July 4, 5, will close June 13, acceptances June 27. Entries have, we learn, been coming in quite lively, and there is every prospect of a fine race. A ten-mile handicap for money prizes and an amateur half-mile handicap will be decided at the same time.

OFF FOR ENGLAND.—The champion amateur short-distance runner of America, L. E. Myers, sailed for Europe on Saturday, May 21, on board the steamer Britannic. He was accompanied by his clubmates Harry Pike and Thomas A. McEwen, and a good-sized party of friends gathered on the dock and heartily wished the voyagers a pleasant trip and success while among the Britons.

FRASER VS. MALARIA.—A very uninteresting and one-sided match is at present being contested between John Fraser and Old Malaria of Swampy Hollow. First John's ahead and then this antagonist, and vice versa; but the chances are that Auld Scotia will come out ahead all right in the end. Sickness prevented Sir John from seeing his protege Myers off for Europe last Saturday.

JOHN MCMAHON is stated to have been attacked by Old Rheumatism May 22, which left him in unfit condition to wrestle Wm. Johnson at Johnny Clark's hall, Philadelphia, the following evening. As Mac's swollen feet and ankles were open to the inspection of the skeptical, and those who were dissatisfied had their money returned, it looks as if John was really disabled.

CHARLEY CONNER, formerly of the metropolis, defeated John Cudihee (with whom he wrestled a draw at Leadville last February) at Turner Hall, Denver, Col., May 18. He won the first and third falls. The hall was full; so it is likely that Conner made a good stake—and perhaps the loser didn't fare much worse.

J. H. MCBRIDE of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium, Philadelphia, is an excellent runner, and is improving each day. From a mere novice one year ago he has worked himself up to eight miles an hour, and will ere long trouble some of the boys to keep at his heels.

WE HAVE letters for Daniel O'Leary, George Hazael and John Burke.

THE SCOTTISH-AMERICAN ATHLETIC CLUB will hold the following club events on their grounds, 329 West Fifty-fourth street, this city, on Saturday, June 18, at 5.30 P. M.: 100 and 600yds. handicap runs, 100yds. sack-race, over six 18-inch hurdles (scratch). Admission to grounds and stand free. The above events are open to club-members only.

HARRY CURTIS, timekeeper, writes to say that the time for the first mile of the two-mile walk at the games of the Scottish-American A. C. of Jersey City was: Boag 8m. 1s., Preyer 8m. 8s., instead of 7m. 41s. and 7m. 43s. It appears that the error occurred through the handicap being twice deducted.

ED. HOLSKE's father died on Monday, May 16, of a bronchial affection, at his residence, in Brooklyn, N. Y., and was buried in Cypress Hills Cemetery on Thursday. He was in his sixtieth year.

A SERIES of pedestrian contests will take place at Akron, O., June 6, 7, 8, 9, for which cash prizes aggregating one thousand dollars will be given. For particulars see advertisement.

BOATING AT PHILADELPHIA.

Our correspondent in the City of Bricks sends us the following newsy items: "The Park Commission are now building a fine boat-house near the steamboat landing. The new building is intended to take the place of the three floating houses where boats are kept for hire, and which for a long time have been such an eyesore to all visitors to our park. The new structure will be 100ft. long, 45ft. wide, and built in the most substantial manner. The material used in its construction will be dark-gray stone. There will be three floors, the two lower ones being used for the storage of boats, while the upper will be fitted up with a number of closets large enough to accommodate the clothing of one person. It is the intention of the Commission to stock the house with first-class boats of all sizes and styles, and keep them for hire. There will also be constantly on hand a number of uniformed men to take parties of ladies up the river, and the whole will be under the direction of a general superintendent.... The annual regatta of the Crescent Boat Club was held May 21 over the lower course, from a point below Belmont to Turtle Rock, one mile straightaway. The races were very interesting, and were witnessed by a large number of spectators from the banks of the river and by three hundred invited guests from the deck of the steamer Belmont, which followed all the races. The start was made at 3.30 P. M., and finished at 6 P. M. No time was taken, except for the first race, between four-oared shells. This was the most exciting and spirited contest of the day. Commodore B. L. Keys presented the prizes to the winners at the club-house after the regatta. A return follows: Four oared shells—G. F. Lasher (bow), Wm. K. Wilson, E. K. Plumly, W. T. Wallace (stroke), first, in 6m. 17⅝s.; H. O. Ridgway (bow), D. J. Myers Jr., S. O. Stokes, J. M. Sullender Jr. (stroke), second. Double-scull shells—M. W. Phillips, C. E. Hallowell (stroke), first; E. K. Plumly, G. W. Young (stroke), second; G. F. Lasher, Wm. K. Wilson (stroke), third. Six-oared barges—G. F. Lasher (bow), D. J. Myers Jr., Geo. Milliken, W. Hallowell, W. T. Wallace, M. W. Phillips (stroke), first; W. A. Hewes (bow), H. D. Ridgway, F. Milliken, J. A. Snyder, G. W. Young, C. E. Hallowell (stroke), B. W. Cotton (cox.), second; George W. Bentel (bow), S. O. Stokes, C. Colladay, W. K. Wilson, C. E. Steel, J. M. Sullender Jr. (stroke), E. K. Plumly (coxswain), third. The prizes were handsome gold badges. Umpire, B. L. Keys; timekeeper, Bernard Gilpin; judge, Austin Street. .....Mr. Dempsey of the Fairmount Rowing Association practices daily over the course, and looks and pulls in fine form. He is a credit to his club, and will no doubt represent it in the national regatta.....The annual review of the Schuylkill Navy takes place on June 4.....The Batchelor Club are out in a gay new uniform, looking extremely bright in their red and blue stripes.....The Crescent Club have just housed a new paper four and a paper double, made by Waters & Son, a new four-oared gig by Byron, and a new double working-boat by Glass.....The coming race for the Childs' challenge cup, between the Pennsylvania University, Princeton and Columbia Colleges, is the main topic of conversation here. The University four are G. H. Freedly (bow), T. J. Hunter, J. L. Bankhurst, W. Dickerson (stroke)."

HOW TRICKETT WON.—Says The Sporting Life: "At Southampton, in his recent matches against Kirby, Trickett had fitted to his skiff a 'fin.' This, a thin plate of copper, some four or five inches wide and about a foot long, was tacked to the bottom of the boat in a line with the keelson, and was in shape not unlike a fish's ventral fin. Its purpose was to prevent the boat being twisted about by the wind, and thus obviate as much as possible excessive one-hand labor. Though not often used, this appliance has for many years been at intervals brought into requisition for racing-craft, and on the occasion of Trickett's first meeting with the South-coast champion enabled the ex-champion to take a much straighter course than his opponent. So well did it serve him, that in all probability it gave him the victory. In fact, every good judge admitted that, as the race was rowed, the Australian would, but for the 'fin,' have lost."

NORTHWESTERN NOTES.—The Farragut Club of Chicago, Ill., will put a single, double and four on the water this year. The four of the Goguac Club of Battle Creek, Mich., will include one new member this year, but he long ago learned how to pull an oar, and the friends of the club confidently predict a successful season. A new junior four will represent the Hillsdale (Mich.) Club this year.

REGATTA FOR PYINGST MONDAY.—The Hudson River Yacht Club of this city announce their ninth annual excursion and regatta for Monday, June 6. The yachts are to race to Yonkers and return, and the excursionists will be accommodated on board the well-known steamer General Sedgwick. There will doubtless be a good assemblage to enjoy the sport.

THE SCULLING MATCH between Austin Stevenson of San Francisco, Cal., and W. Cotsford of Victoria, B. C., which was to have been decided at Merced Lake May 28, is off. A disagreement between him and his trainer, who was unable to curb the oarsman's appetite for unwholesome articles of diet, is stated to have been the cause of the trouble.

THE HARVARD EIGHT has been selected and are now seated in the boat as follows: E. D. Brandege, '81 (bow); F. L. Sawyer, '83; O. J. Pfeiffer, M. S.; C. M. Hammond, '83; E. T. Cabot, '83; S. I. Hudgrees, '84; W. Chalfant, '82; C. P. Curtis, '83 (stroke). The substitutes are F. Warner, '82; C. M. Belshaw, '83; S. P. Sawyer, '83.

THE FIRST REGATTA of the season in that section was held by the Cooper's Point Yacht Club on the Delaware, at Philadelphia, May 23. There were four contestants, and the race was won by Capt. Smith's Springer, with Capt. Funk's Cahill second and Rock's Schuck third. The winner took the champion flag.

CONLEY the oarsman, accompanied by Wm. Spellman of Portland, Me., his trainer, arrived at Halifax, N. S., on Monday, May 16, and has taken up his quarters at the Four-mile House, Bedford Basin. He does not intend to lose any time, and has gone at once into active training.

THE NEWTON B. C. will hold a regatta on the Charles River at Auburndale, Mass., June 25. A half-dozen races are on the programme.

ATHLETIC.

HARRIMAN'S CHICAGO PERFORMANCE.

The announced unprecedented performance of Charles A. Harriman in the recent six-days heel-and-toe walking tournament, given under the management of Daniel O'Leary at the Exposition Building in Chicago, Ill., has excited much comment in sporting circles. Remembering the difficulty he experienced a little more than two years previously in reaching the minimum distance-limit of 450 miles in the go-as-you-please race wherein Rowell first won the Astley belt, it is not surprising that the public should doubt the genuineness of the announced performance, questioning the length of the track and the honesty of the scoring. The race of 1879 was his initial attempt, however, at six-days racing, and the running which he upon that occasion was obliged to do in order to keep within a respectable distance of the natural trotters opposed to him, it is likely, proved a far greater tax upon his powers than if he had adhered to his regular mode of progression. He has also benefited greatly by the work done and experience gained during the past two years; and, as we are assured, he was carefully prepared and was in superior condition when he started for the Chicago walk, in which he early assumed the lead, and regulated the pace afterwards. We have received the score-sheets of Harriman, Tracey, Krohne, Struckel and Faber, the prize-winners, and an examination thereof indicates that—as stated last week by our correspondent, who officiated as one of the judges—the scoring was honestly done. Owing, however, to the fact that no chronometer was used, the time being taken from a clock standing twenty feet from the score-stand, the miles were not accurately timed, no account being taken of fractions of a minute except at certain stages of the contest, for which reason the mile times are valueless for purposes of record. From the documents submitted to us, there seems to be no question about the accuracy of the reported actual distance traveled, the only fault being in the margin in seconds, which could only be guessed at. It is unfortunate that the management did not make better arrangements in regard to a matter of so much importance as this, especially in view of the fact that, according to the sheets before us, the winner's performance from the first day to the finish excelled the best previously accomplished. We present below an affidavit made by the judges and scorers, the original of which, bearing the official seal, is in our possession:

EXPOSITION BUILDING, CHICAGO, May 14, 1881.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: We, the undersigned judges and scorers, appointed in the O'Leary six-day pedestrian tournament, commencing on Monday, May 9, and ending on Saturday night, May 14, 1881, do hereby certify, under oath, that during the time of our respective watches, or terms on duty, which embraces the entire time from start to finish of the present contest—namely, over 141 hours—the records of said pedestrian tournament have been well and truly kept; that the distances made by each and all of the competitors have been honestly and faithfully placed to their credit; and furthermore, that no pedestrian received any lap or mile of ground more than he was justly entitled to, the following being the distances walked by the winners of prizes in the above pedestrian tournament: Harriman, 530 miles; Tracey, 523 miles; Krohne, 520¼ miles; Struckel, 458½miles; Faber, 450¼ miles. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of May, A. D. 1881.
(Seal) CHARLES F. HARDY, Notary Public.

We have also received a certificate from the surveyor who laid out the track, a copy of which document we append:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, s. s.

I, Samuel S. Greeley, do hereby certify that I have surveyed and marked out in the Exposition Building, in the city of Chicago, State and County aforesaid, a walking course of 660 feet in length, or eight laps to the mile. I further certify that the inclosed plat correctly represents said walking course as laid out.

SAMUEL S. GREELEY, City and County Surveyor, 97 Washington street.
Chicago, May 7, A. D. 1881.

The scorers credit Harriman with walking 118 miles 468 yards in the first twenty-four hours, 216 miles in forty-eight hours, 300 miles in seventy-two hours, 384 miles in ninety-six hours (retiring for rest at 9h. 44m. P. M. on the fourth day, and being off over five hours), 461 miles in one hundred and twenty hours, and completing 530 miles at 8h. 57m. P. M. on the sixth day. The best previous six-day record was 519 miles 1,585 yards in 141h. 6m. 10s., made by O'Leary in England, and the same distance was completed by Harriman at 5h. 23m. 54s. P. M. May 14. A correspondent writing from Chicago in regard to the contest says: "Harriman deserves great credit for the thorough gameness shown by him, as on the first day he for some time labored much, but by sheer determination and pluck he pulled himself together and went ahead with his long stride, gradually coming round to himself. Had he been pushed on the fourth day of the race he could have done one hundred miles, thus making four hundred miles in four days. On Wednesday evening he left the track for more than two hours, as twenty-two amateurs were engaged in a special race, and he was afraid he might get run into. I was in his tent on the morning of May 13 (Friday), and was surprised to find him in such good condition. His left heel was badly blistered, causing him to go lame, but in other respects he was in good shape. When he finished he had one pretty bad leg. Tracey is also a good man, and very easy to handle. Krohne's friends lost considerable money on their man, Walpole & Gottlob, bookmakers, winning about $1,200 on the field against him. He and Faber were both sick on the first day, but no doubt rests in my mind that Harriman is a better man than either of them."

BALTIMORE ATHLETIC CLUB.

There was a large assemblage, including very many ladies, at Newington Park, Baltimore, Md., on the occasion of the fourth annual Spring meeting of this club, held on Monday afternoon, May 16. The turf course, four laps to the mile, was in fairly good condition, and the weather was pleasant. Return:

One-hundred-yards run—L. E. Myers, Manhattan A. C., first, in 10⅞s.; J. S. Voorhees, Man. A. C., second. Won very easily.
One-mile walk—A. M. Page, scratch, first, in 7m. 34⅛s.; C. A. Bayne, 220yds., second.
Pole-vaulting—H. H. Baxter, New York A. C., first, 8ft. 8in.; H. N. Fowler, B. A. C., second, 8ft. 2in.; J. Pleasants, B. A. C., 7ft. 10in.

NATIONAL AMATEUR ASSOCIATION.

Delegates from eleven clubs attended the adjourned meeting of this Association in this city May 18. The election for an official handicapper resulted in the choice of William McEwen, late of the Manhattan Athletic Club, and a gentleman who in the past has satisfactorily demonstrated his fitness for this important position, the duties of which he may be depended upon to conscientiously perform. It was also resolved "that the services of the official handicapper elected by this Association shall be recommended to all associate and approved clubs giving handicap games, and that he shall receive for each set of games handicapped by him the sum of ten dollars, to be paid by the club whose games shall be so handicapped, before the games are handicapped; and that the handicapper shall hold office until the next championship meeting, or until his successor is appointed." The decision of the committee to have the Association incorporated was on motion approved, and a motion that all associate clubs be requested to become incorporated was carried by a vote of 6 to 5. It was also resolved "that persons, members of college and other amateur baseball clubs, who have competed with professional baseball-players where gate-money was charged have violated the definition of an amateur as held by this Association."

IKE SMITH defeated Joe Acton in a Lancashire wrestling match, best of three falls, for the 140lb championship and $850 (Acton staking $500 against $350), at the Larkill Grounds, Farnworth, Eng., April 30. Acton won the first fall in six minutes, while Smith took the second in eight minutes and the third in two minutes and a half. About six thousand persons were present, and the betting was largely in favor of Acton.

Numerous games for money prizes will take place, but the special feature will be a goaling contest between the South Boston and Worcester Hurling Clubs for a silver cup and the New England championship. The club has secured quarters at 28 Kneeland street, Boston.

HALEY AND BELCHER.—At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Olympic Club of San Francisco it was resolved, byn a unanimous vote, to send R. S. Haley and J. T. Belcher to New York to compete in the championship games. They will leave 'Frisco the second week in August, and will compete in the 100, 220 and 440 yards runs, 120 hurdles, and the running long-jump.

A FOUR-MILE RUN for $20 took place at the festival of Mechanics' Engine, No. 6, and Pelican Hook-and-ladder Company 4, at Oakland Park, La., May 15. Seven started, and M. Bergdorf won in the very slow time of 34m. 47¼s.; Pat Dale, 35m. 9s., second.

THE FASTEST 1,000 YARDS.

We take from The (London) Sporting Life the following interesting account of a race between W. Cummings and W. Duddle, at the Borough Grounds, Preston, Eng., April 30, in which the winner eclipsed the previously best record at one thousand yards—L. E. Myers' 2m. 18⅗s., at Elizabeth, N. J., July 10, 1880. The best previous professional time was 2m. 19⅗s., made by James Nuttall when he defeated Ridley at the Royal Oak Park, Manchester, Eng., in 1872: "A lot of money changed hands on the result, the betting opening at 7 to 4 on Cummings, and, these odds being readily met by Duddle's party, 6 to 4 became soon the highest offer, and eventually 5 to 4, even money being the rule, to a good round sum, whilst the men were on the mark, about $250 going on at the latter quotation. Cummings was seen to be in the pink of condition, and stated his weight to be about 130½lb; but Duddle looked a trifle on the big side, and wore a plaster on his chest. They were despatched to a capital start, and Duddle at once went to the fore, the Scotchman taking up his position about a yard in the rear, and thus they proceeded until about half the distance had been gone over, the pace being something terrific, when Cummings became level for a few yards, but then went back to 'as you were,' the test coming when they had 300yds. to traverse, and here the champion shot to the front, immediately placed three yards to his credit, and from this point the race was virtually over, Duddle not having an effort left, and Cummings came sailing away, repeatedly looking behind him in the last 100yds., and going through the worsted an easy winner by six yards in the remarkably fast time of 2m. 17s. It may be mentioned, for the satisfaction of anyone inclined to doubt the distance run as being accurate, that the ground had been carefully measured, 603½yds. being the lap, thus making one lap and 396½yds. to be completed to cover the 1,000yds."

HARVARD ATHLETES.

The class competitive meetings of the seniors and freshmen of Harvard University were held on Jarvis Field, Cambridge, Mass., May 20. Return of Seniors: One-hundred-yards run—J. V. Witherbee, first, in 10¾sec.; H. Elliott, second; W. Freeland, third. The two latter tied for second place and ran again. Running high-jump—R. Sturgis, first, 4ft. 11½in.; J. L. Paine, second, 4ft. 10⅛in. Quarter-mile run—J. V. Witherbee, first, in 53⅘sec.; T. H. Simmons, second. Freshmen: One-hundred-yards run—H. R. Mandell, first, in 10⅘sec.; S. Kemp, second. G. R. Agassiz was disqualified for fouling the latter. One-mile run—W. M. Burr first, in 5m. 39⅘s.; J. U. Nef, second by 2ft.; and S. T. Hutchinson, third by 9ft. One-mile walk—S. H. Blodgett, first, in 10m. 6⅘s.; W. S. Bryant disqualified. Hammer-throwing—R. P. Perkins, first, 63ft. 8in.; L. Bonsal, second, 62ft. 3in. Quarter-mile run—W. H. Goodwin first, in 53⅘s.; G. R. Agassiz second, G. Kemp third.

Of Enigma No. 1,270.—This position is correctly copied; but The Chronicle notes that the stipulation should have been "suimate in three moves," thus: 1..Q to K B 5, Kt moves; 2..Q to R 7 +, K × R; 3..Q to K 7 +, compelling K × Q, mate.

Problem 1,270 (by "Far West").—1..R to R 8 +; 2..Q to Kt 6; 3..K to R sq; 4..B to Kt sq; 5..Q to Kt 2 +, compelling P × Q, mate. "Very fine indeed; an honor to the composer."

Enigma 1,271 ("F. W.").—K B to Kt sq, R × Q B; 2..Kt to Kt 2, etc. "Very interesting; easy to go wrong."

Problem 1,271.—1..R to K Kt 5, etc. Our contributors are unanimous and enthusiastic in praise of this fine little opus.

NOTES BY MR. POTTER.

(a) Very ineffective; 7..P to Q 4, or P to B 6.
(b) Bad, in every form of the Allgaier-Thorold; K should go to Kt 2.
(c) Q Kt to B 3 is decidedly better; if Kt to B 3, then 11.. Q to her 2; and if Black 10..Q to K sq, 11..Q to her 2.
(d) Doubtless best, as otherwise the results of his tenth move will begin to tell against him.
(e) I doubt if this be really requisite.
(f) I think there is time for K B to Kt 2; a very advisable move to make.
(g) A frightfully strong move.
(h) I still prefer B to Kt 2, as loss of some kind cannot be avoided. His next move makes matters worse, and the twentieth was a blunder—though nothing then would save him.

THE LITTLE LOG-HOUSE ON THE HILL.—BALLAD.

WRITTEN AND COMPOSED FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

WORDS BY MARTHA WREN COLLINS. MUSIC BY CHARLES CONNOLLY.

[Copyrighted, 1881, by FRANK QUEEN.]

p Andante affettuoso.
1. In mem'ry I'm back to my childhood, And there, in the wide o - pen
2. My broth - er stands there at the win - dow, And seat - ed near, on the low door,... Stands moth - er— as oft I have seen her,.... Whom on sill,.... Is my he - ro— my girlhood's one lov - er,..... And we earth I shall see nev - er - more. The but - ter - cups, vio - lets and dai - sies Grow wan - der each eve by the mill. I mar - ried for wealth and for splendor, But his rall.
'round the old door-stone at will, 'Round the home that I loved in my phan - tom is haunt - ing me still; And I wan - der in dreams with my child - hood, The... lit - tle log - house on the hill;... 'Round the own love, Near the lit - tle log - house on the hill;... Yes, I home that I lov'd in my childhood, The lit - tle log-house on the hill.
wan - der in dreams with my own love, Near the lit - tle log-house on the hill.

3.

Since then I have roamed the world over,
I've viewed lands and scenery rare,
But none seemed as bright or as radiant—
Ah! none seemed so wondrously fair—
As when, years ago, we two courted
By the stream and the old-fashioned mill;
No palace could be half as lovely
As the little log-house on the hill.
No palace, etc.

4.

I'm rich in each prized worldly comfort,
I've carriages, jewels, and gold,
But my heart will turn back to my girlhood,
And the friends as I knew them of old.
And the teardrops fall faster and faster,
As I dream on in silence so chill,
And the phantoms are gathering 'round me
From the little log-house on the hill.
Yes, the phantoms, etc.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

J. S. M., Mobile.—1. There is no such firm, because no publishing-house can have any interest in publishing plays that are the property of actors. 2. You cannot get reliable information as to more than a comparatively few such plays. Many have been translated and never produced, so far as any collater of that kind of information knows, and many others have been produced and been palmed off as original without being recognized. 3. It would be better to make a few specific inquiries covering the more prominent or more popular plays. 4. That play has various titles. "Graf Essex," or "The Earl of Essex," is among them.

L. E. W., Boston.—We cannot discriminate. You might later on condemn our judgment, and those against whom we discriminated would certainly condemn it. Look over our business pages, and choose to suit yourself. We may tell you, to begin with, that there are very few places in which the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children would allow "a talented miss of eleven years, at home in everything," to prove herself at home in anything—except at home.

W. L., Wilkesbarre.—There are few things more difficult than for a man to get on the stage, unless he can bring personal influence to bear upon some manager of a stationary troupe, or by advertising can "prevail upon" the manager of a traveling troupe. The reason is that there are thousands of people "just dying to go on the stage," and who think that Nature designed them for naught else. Your experience in writing to managers, who have not vouchsafed an answer, is a sermon in itself.

C. P. G., Springfield.—1. This column is designed for readers of this paper, and we will not answer by mail, telegraph or word of mouth. Readers of this column know that our rule is not to give the ages of professionals, more especially ladies. 2. We are continually in receipt of suggestions as to how we can dodge our rules; but for us to give the age without naming the person would be to defeat the purpose of this column, which is to make the question asked by one person of interest to many.

H. C. F., Davenport.—1. William Henderson, Standard Theatre; Henry E. Abbey, Park Theatre; J. H. Haverly, Niblo's Garden, Fifth-avenue Theatre and Lyceum Theatre; and Aug. Daly, Daly's Theatre. Possibly it may be a guide to you to inform you that within the past eighteen or nineteen years there have been about a dozen different adaptations of "Les Miserables" produced in this country. Everything in that novel is therefore familiar to every old manager.

A. T. C., Lawrence.—1. See answer to "C. P. G., Springfield," as to violating our rules. 2. As an actress, Miss Maggie Mitchell made her announced debut in 1851, at Burton's Chambers-street Theatre, this city. 3. You cannot get at her age in that way. That will throw you off, for she then played the child Julia in "The Soldier's Daughter."

A. B., Morristown.—1. When you cannot find the whereabouts of a company after reading our amusement columns for any two or three consecutive weeks, the meaning of it is that the company has ceased traveling in the United States or Canadas. 2. The Globe Company has probably closed the season. By referring to our advertising pages, you will find the manager's address and proposals as to next season.

M. F. H., Galveston.—1. Our time is devoted to publishing THE CLIPPER. We do not sell plays, furnish properties and the like, or procure engagements. 2. The likelier way to get a customer is to advertise your play in our business columns. If you succeed, you will save commissions; if you fail, you will not be out much in cash.

C. H., Meriden.—1. Many contortionists have died of consumption. The business is seemingly not wholesome, for few who follow it are long-lived. 2. See the card of Ed. James in our business columns. He publishes such a book. 3. There is no generally recognized champion clog-dancer.

MAGGIE A. TAYLOR, whose address is Portland Station, Jefferson County, O., wishes to learn the whereabouts of an actor named Oscar Hunt, who, she states, is her brother. Anyone who can furnish the information will help to "bring back a dear son and save a life."

WILLIAMS, Savannah.—1. See answer to "C. P. G., Springfield," which we hope will excuse us from giving the age of Miss Clara Morris, and which also explains why we choose to mention names in these answers. 2. Clara Morris first appeared in this city Sept. 13, 1870.

W. N. A., Baltimore.—1. Harry and Lizzie Braham are in Great Britain. 2. The Richmond Sisters are performing abroad. They were in London a few weeks ago. 3. Louis Harrison was with the Rice Surprise Party, and he did play the Court Jester in "Horrors."

J. A. J., St. Joseph.—1. State your wishes as briefly as possible. Use your own discretion as to stating your age. 2. The price of this paper and its terms for advertising can always be found on another page. The first is ten cents, and the second is twenty cents a line.

J. R. N., Ottawa.—1. We do not give the addresses of professionals other than those that appear from time to time in our amusement columns. 2. Miss Sara Jewett is not married. 3. She is still with the Union-square Theatre Company.

C. A. L., Philadelphia.—We do not give addresses. Nard Almayne is not just now before the public, we believe; but you can address Nelson Decker, her husband, in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office. He is in this city.

READER, Salem.—1. The Joseph Murphy who is now playing "Kerry Gow" is the one who was in partnership with Ben Cotton in the minstrel business. 2. That Ben Cotton is the one who is now traveling in drama with Little Idalene, who is his daughter.

D. B. S., San Francisco.—1. We do not know who "the late John A. Stevens" was. 2. Henry E. Abbey has been manager of our Park Theatre since it was opened for the season beginning Nov. 27, 1877.

M. S. E., Hamilton.—The route of the Corinne Merriemakers has been given in our amusement columns for weeks past. Those in search of routes must seek those columns. No answers by mail.

F. P. B., Philadelphia.—When we get information of that character it appears in our amusement columns, which should be watched from week to week. This department is not for that purpose.

R. L. C., Philadelphia.—It was Atkinson the banjo-player, we believe. He was in Philadelphia when he wrote us. He did not forward any address.

J. L. S., Marquette.—Those whose reputations stand at the front are Joachim, Wilhelmj and Vieuxtemps.

A READER.—When "Our Boarding-house" was first seen in this city, W. E. Sheridan played Joseph Fidretti. It was at the Park.

J. T. C., Little Rock.—1. Her mother was Mrs. Jane McClain. 2. John McCullough the actor was married a number of years ago.

ANXIOUS MOTHER, Cincinnati, wishes to learn the address of Miss Frankie Berkeley.

W. H. T., Fall River.—Address Horsman, William street and Maiden lane, this city, for information as to those hobby horses.

W. A. C., Janesville.—We would recommend that you either address her in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office or advertise for her.

C. R., Philadelphia.—1. See column of regular answers. 2. The Pat Rooney who is here is manifestly an Irishman.

E. M., Burlington.—1. We have not the remotest idea that N. C. Goodwin Jr. is an Israelite. 2. His birthplace is Boston, Mass.

J. M.—Your note is dated May 16, 1881, when the play you name was produced for the announced first time in this city.

J. A. W., Fort Wallace.—There are hundreds of John Weavers. If you mean John Henry Weaver the actor, he died last year.

C. A. W., Goshen.—In a space of four lines your card will cost eighty cents for each insertion.

B. J. M.—Probably the last appearance of the Vokes Family in this city prior to their present engagement was on July 8, 1876.

D. V. R., Melrose.—Both songs appeared originally in THE CLIPPER many years ago. They were written for this paper.

INQUIRER, Cairo.—Miss Katie Putnam did not play in this city in 1872, 1874, or 1875.

ADMIRER, San Francisco.—We have a correspondent in your city.

C. N., Brooklyn.—Address him in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office.

STAGE STRUCK, Columbus.—See answer to "W. L., Wilkesbarre."

C. M. A., Cincinnati.—Address him in care of THE CLIPPER P. O.

S. B. R., Fond du Lac.—See answer to "C. P. G., Springfield."

H. M. L.—Your card would cost one dollar.

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, May 24, '81.

Let it be recorded that another go-as-you-please jubilee is in progress at Madison-square Garden, which seems to be the popular trysting-place for pedestrian veterans and others who are just beginning to make a record on the field of cloth of green. Beautiful music, the outcome of a sacred concert given in the Garden on Sunday evening, ushered in the competitors for the prizes offered by Mr. O'Leary; but, in order not to violate the sanctities of the Sabbath, the boys were not permitted to start upon their tour until five minutes after the midnight hour had been tolled upon the city bells. Then they all got off as if a free lunch were waiting their presence and consideration not far away. Notwithstanding the disastrous fizzle at the Rink a couple of weeks ago, there was a quite good attendance at the Madison-square Garden yesterday morning to see the stalwarts make their way as best they could unto the promised land. But Conkling was not in the arena as a competitor for the laurels, nor was he even a spectator of the animated scene. Those of our theatrical friends who were present gave evidence, in divers ways, of their disapproval of the entire proceedings, remembering that a similar contention in Chicago a week or so ago put the theatres there under a cloud, and thinned out the audiences to the proportions of living skeletons. There is not a very friendly feeling between theatrical managers and pedestrian conductors, the one looking upon the other as a cumberer of the ground, and the other vice versa, if you know what that is. We count both classes among our friends. We are the neutral force that keeps the opposing factions apart, and preserves the peace intact. If these go-as-you-please competitions can be made the means of turning out good, healthy candidates for the Presidency of the United States, every freeman in the land will applaud us for the active part we have taken therein.....There is little hope that Texas will ever reform. We all remember the attack made on poor Porter when the Cummins Troupe went down there on professional business. Well, things are just as bad as ever. A correspondent informs us that he recently saw a "combination" shot in a billiard-room there. Of what avail are police officials if these wicked things are openly practiced?.....When Lester Wallack crossed over to the Bowery to perform, he got into evil habits, and carried away with him some of the worst features of that section of the metropolis.

We thought that the Bowery landmarks
Had faded away, every bit;
So how in "The World" does it happen
That Wallack's possesses a Pit!

.....The recent musical jubilee has been the indirect means of inciting the antagonism of the small boy against unmewsical cats in order that the market may be kept supplied with fiddle-strings, the destruction of strings at the jubilee creating a corner, and sending prices up like it was a steamboat explosion. The action of the small boy has put things on a level again, and he is very happy.....When the new places of amusement get started, and the theatres already existing from Twenty-second street to Thirty-third street, on Broadway, are again peopled with the merry men and women who have rung out the changes and the chimes on comic opera, burlesque, etc., it may not be out of place to call that part of the city the "Coast of All Jours!".....Some of our theatrical stars who have projected professional visits to London have become so mistrustful of the people there since late advices show what a scoring it is possible for our representatives to get, that they have canceled their steamship dates, and secured passage for a trip along the line of the Erie Canal. It is never too late to mend.....We have often wondered why some of our menageries didn't enter into negotiation with Professor Darwin to lecture on the animals. The Professor would no doubt be a very useful man in such a show, if he were permitted to "a tail unfold.".....A musical student wants to know if Senator D. Davis was the original of that beautiful oratorio entitled "Wait for the Wagon." We have solid and weighty reasons for believing that D. D. is not the man.....A correspondent out in Alaska asks: "Don't you think that 'Hamlet,' 'Macbeth,' 'Othello,' 'Lear' and other works of Shakespeare could be rewritten so as to make them more palatable?" Yes, but we cannot spare the time from our regular duties to make the improvements suggested. Besides, just now we are busily engaged in reconstructing "Paradise Lost.".....Another freak of nature has recently come to pass—an infant with one head and two mouths. We cannot see that anything of public benefit is to be gained by this addition to nature's collection of curiosities. In the first place, double rations must be provided in order to supply the child with food. What would suit one mouth might be objected to by the other, and then crimination and recrimination would follow; so, too, with regard to their beverage—one, brought up on the bottle, might insist on a continuance of the bottle up to and past the years of manhood; the second mouth, brought up in the regular way, would naturally object to the intemperate habits of the other, and then there would be another row. Again, should the owner of the two mouths be sent to Congress, how would it work for one mouth to advocate the just principles of the Government, while the other just as strenuously opposed the Government, and took every opportunity to cry it down? Under such diverse circumstances what a lamentable spectacle would the two mouths present in the Senate of the United States. It would not answer. We go in strong for public improvements; we want nature improved upon wherever it can be done without injury to the proprieties; but this two-mouthed infant can never be tolerated by experienced sideshowmen who have the good of the people at heart. We want no more monstrosities of this sort. We leave the matter to the tender care of Charles H. Day, who is a "Day of Judgment.".....The guileless Jim boy has again been smitten by the charms and graces of a young girl, and in this wise he pours forth his soul in blank verse:

TU ANNIE WINNER.*—BY O. JIM.

O Annie Winner! yure so fare, I hopes no trubles ever freta yer; I envy mutch the 1st-klass luck of any winner that may get yer; for I kin rede yer, darlin' creeture, true Winner sence in every freture!

.....Appended may be found an excerpt from a new comic opera—now in course of arrangement for the opening of the next season—by Von Supe. It is called "The Palace of Lise," a companion piece to Gilbert's gem "The Palace of Truth." Locality—Shady side of Union-square. Time—When brightly breaks the morning. Quarrel Scene.

First Murderer.—"You! Why, you haven't got the forehead of a hen!"

Second Assassin.—"Hen's forehead you and I are strangers!"

.....He wanted to be a minstrel and with the minstrels stand, and he was as fresh as an unseasoned oyster. It was the old-time minstrel Sam Sanford he encountered, and this is the purport of their discourse:

Fresh One.—Are you the manager of this mammoth minstrel show?

Sam.—The same. What wouldst thou have?

Fresh.—I wouldst, ah, join the ranks and travel with the mammoths.

Sam.—Have you ever appeared in black?

Fresh.—Not since me gentle mother died. (Curtain.)

.....When the show entered Utica there was a great crowd in waiting, and one man, bolder than the rest, inquired if Conkling and Platt were with the concern. They said him nay, but they claimed to possess the original Bengal tigers, and the ticket-wagon was overturned in the frantic efforts of the people to get a good place. The show next visited Albany.....Now, it came to pass that when the Tourists came to pass over Jordan, lo! there stood before them large numbers of sappers and miners and toilers, all on a strike for higher wages. And when the traveling combination did unto this multitude approach, the mighty men of muscle and hard-handed sons of Athens did bar their progress, and greet them with jeers and contumely. But the Tourists fled not, neither did they wince, for they, too, were bread-winners. Then up spake the leader of the strikers, saying: "Behold! We are laborers, and make money with our two hands." "Even so," remarked Mestayer, "we are alike, for we make money with our two wrists [Tourists]." This so pleased the other two-handed party that they stood aside, and let the merry Thespians pass over by-and-bye.....There is great grief and tribulation among theatrical managers in Philadelphia, the State having commenced suits against them for failing to pay the tax of five hundred dollars each. If the law compels them to pay up, all hands will have to stay at home this Summer for lack of funds, which will make it very hard on our friends, who, between the closing of one season and the opening of another, devote their spare time to rural enjoyment and seaside festivities. Five hundred dollars and to stand committed until paid! This is a very dreary prospect for the boys.....While we are "resting between bars," as our musical friends would say when they go out to drink, we propose to evolve a few rhymes about our youthful stage divinities, in this wise:

KITTENS, NEVER CATS.

The girls of the stage would "kittens" be,
Disporting among the "flats";
But though to this title they all agree,
You never must urge in the simile
That "kittens" grow up to be "cats."

.....Whether the presentation of a Greek play by Harvard at Cambridge is likely to be followed by a burlesque of the same by Yale at New Haven is what no collegiate has as yet found out. That this sort of theatrical representation is likely to become a fixture we cannot believe, notwithstanding the popularity of the Grecian language in this country and the favor and esteem in which the Greek is held by Americans. We do no not approve of these new contrivances to draw attention from our own stage and our own plays. What care we for Sophocles and his "Œdipus [another name for our Octopus, probably] Tyrannus?" We have authors of our own and plays of our own, and we want no innovations by tyrannical foreigners. Is our own stage, with its traditions, to be given up to a Greek rabble? Are our own people, who have devoted years to the study of Shakespeare and other great native authors, to be supplanted by a set of noodles from the land of Greece? Eh? These foreign encroachments are intended to undermine our republican form of government and stage representation. They are working cunningly, insidiously and sinuously. Every year shows the deep progress they are making. Look at the extent of their operations this season. A Frenchwoman named Bernhardt is actually imported by an American manager and foisted upon us as the representative of Moliere, Rasselas, Duplan, Joavet, and a lot more of those other literary chaps. What is the result? Nearly two hundred thousand dollars of good American money carried away from us like a thief in the night, and our own suffering poor left to suffer on. Look at that foreign exotic Salvini. He, too, is brought here by an American to insult Len Shewell and other native actors. Who is Salvini? and what is he? He is a strolling player, a native of Italy, whence emanate the mobs of organ-grinders with which the streets of New York are constantly infested. What did he do? Carted away fifty thousand dollars, while his importer and manager, John Stetson of the modern Athens, got only three thousand dollars out of the snap! Is this right, is it just? Is the American manager to be thrust aside while these Greeks fill their dusters with our sovereign money? Suppose a second Greek tragedian should be thrust upon us before the first has gone through us? What then? Let the great American poet, who foresaw all these evils, answer:

"When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war,"

a species of sport made popular here by our own athletic associations. Already an avalanche of foreigners is getting in readiness to overwhelm us next season. Why? Because "there's millions in it," as the Etruscan poet Sellers so truthfully remarked. On the best authority, we learn that another so-called Italian tragedian has secured dates in this country for next season. His alleged name is Rossi—probably a descendant of the great Roman actor Rosci-us! What does he come for? Our money! What do they care for the classics? Take the case of Bobingersoli, the Barbarian from the land of the infidel. What's his mission? Money! His next lecture will be on the New Testament, newly revised and improved. What has caused his opposition to that work? The revisers and correctors of the Bible failed to enumerate him among the disseminators of the laws and the prophets, and the translucent Demosthenes will fight against the testamentary document to the bitter end. And the worst of it is that our own American people, by their presence and dollars, lift "Bob up serenely." It will not do. There is a limit to these illicit transgressions, and we care no more for Sophocles than we do for Thucydides and his minions. We are told that Sophocles vouches for the originality of his Greek tragedy "The Tyrannical Octopus." Just so. But who will vouch for Sophocles, unless some of our own professional vouchers around the City Hall can be hired to do it? The limit of our forbearance has been reached. This is a United States country, and the language of the people is likewise United States, and we want no Greek tongue, no Hebrew tongue, no Italian tongue. We want nothing but the good old American beef tongue, smoked. We have dwelt upon this subject longer than we intended to do; but, as this is a dwelling-place for the oppressed of all nations, we feel that we have transgressed no biblical or other law by thus freely and at length expressing our opinion on foreign actors and foreign plays. Sophocles, Melpomene, Thucydides and Cicero may do very well in their nations, but we do not want them here. We can make our own plays and act them. Sophocles be blamed!

CITY SUMMARY.

CARRIE BURTON, who during the long run of "Billee Taylor" has made the role of Phœbe a very attractive feature by her admirable and spirited acting and agreeable singing, is deserving of more than ordinary praise for the industry and ability she has displayed in so rapidly advancing in her profession, as it was but a short time previous to this production that she was in the chorus ranks. Bright, clever and ambitious, she has won the entire respect and esteem of her associates and numerous friends, who made this apparent on Thursday evening last, when they gave her a genuine surprise during the performance at the Standard Theatre by the presentation of a handsome workbasket filled with flowers, a floral ship, and an elegant gold locket.

THERE was almost a full house at Wallack's on the afternoon of May 18. It was composed mainly of pretty girls and modest women—one of those audiences that do not go out between acts to see a man or two. The managers of the House of the Holy Family, a Catholic institution for befriending young girls, had hired the theatre, and the regular company played "Old Heads and Young Hearts." The curtain had to be raised at the end of every act but the last, and John Gilbert as Jesse Rural and Osmond Tearle as Lyttleton Coke had each a special recall.

CLOSED.—Niblo's Garden was not opened on the night of May 18, owing to a strike of the stage hands. A. Bernis had leased the theatre from Mr. Haverly for six weeks, at $1,500 per week, to produce "Castles in Spain," and, it is said, had paid two weeks' rent in advance. The attaches of the front of the house were furnished by Mr. Haverly, and Mr. Bernis engaged all the people employed behind the curtain. We are informed that about $2,500 was due them; and, although the actors agreed to play that night, the stage-hands refused to perform their share of the labor unless they could be guaranteed that their back salary, as well as that for the rest of the week, would be forthcoming. Orders were given not to open the doors, and the treasurer refunded what money he had received for the sale of tickets.

HERRMANN closed his season in the San Francisco Minstrels' Opera-house May 21. It did not prove financially successful, and the recent failure of similar entertainments by possibly better skilled performers in this city lead us to believe that magical entertainments are "played out," save when given solely for the purpose of amusing children.

W. A. MESTAYER, Miss Theresa Vaughn and Miss Jennie Reiffarth of the Tourists have returned from San Francisco.

JOHN E. MCDONOUGH is to sail for Europe June 11.

JOHN AND HENRY MEECH returned to Buffalo, last week.

THE ATTENDANCE at Harry Miner's Theatre was satisfactory May 23, when the additions to the company were Fannie Beane and Chas. Gilday in their act entitled "Spices," Minnie Lee in popular songs, the Electric Three—Callan, Haley and Callan—in Ethiopian songs-and-dances and a burlesque drama, Billy Carter in banjo ditties, and Cronin and Sullivan in their sketch "Life in a Tenement-house."

THE NEW FACES in the olio at Dick Parker's American Theatre May 23 were Frank and Fannie Davis in "Fogarty's Night Out," Ward and Lynch in Irish specialties, Ada Forrest in serio-comic songs, Morton and Mack in grotesque songs-and-dances, and Sanders and Dean in the plantation sketch entitled "Jubilee Day." The concluding drama, "The Shaughaun," introduced John T. Hinds as Con and Miss Ivian Lawrence as Marie Lismore.

AT THE VOLKS' GARDEN the new attractions for the current week include Clooney and Ryan's Dutch drolleries, Ernest Thorne's sleight-of hand feats, and Carrie Boshell's songs-and-dances. Ed. A. Bolenius, manager, has a complimentary benefit May 25.

FANNY MAY and her manager, R. C. Dutton, arrived May 23 from Houston, Texas, where Fannie May's British Blondes closed their tour 15.

JOHN D. MISHLER of the Mishler Circuit and Academy of Music, Reading, Pa., will be at the Morton House May 27, 28.

PHIL SIMMONDS arrived here May 24, and Marcus Mayer 23.

"DONNA JUANITA" is drawing passably good business to the Fifth-avenue Theatre. Jennie Winston's spirited and clever personation of the title-role is the feature of the performance. Her singing would never bring her much favor, but what voice she has is tastefully used, and the success of the character lies almost altogether in her excellent comedy-acting as the daredevil, scapegrace young officer. As she plays it, there is much to amuse and admire. Janet Edmonston sings nicely as Petrita, and the opera in its principal roles is generally well given. The chorus do some capital work. There is not the material, however, in this work of Suppe's to call to it any great success. The ideas are decidedly old, and, though effectively scored, they lack the attraction that something new might offer. Plenty of noise and sparkle are the principle features, with the stronger point of a very amusing story. The libretto as given here might with good taste have some of the lines that savor of another atmosphere than a polite one cut out. Some of the phrases are extremely broad. The opera remains the attraction for some nights yet, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

"BILLEE TAYLOR" still continues at the Standard Theatre to fairly good houses. What is known as the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company has left on its travels, and the Standard Opera Company, as it is called, fills its place. The cast in the principal roles, with one exception, is changed, but without any material lessening of interest in the piece. The tenor-role for the first time is in good hands, and Eugene Clarke's admirable voice, clear enunciation and good stage presence make it thoroughly enjoyable. Sig. Brocolini is an excellent Christopher Crab, and the diminutive Geo. Thorne is at least funny as Captain Flapper. Harry Standish's Sir Mincing Lane is a poor performance, and W. O. Wilkinson as Barnacle and Emma Guthrie as Susan are acceptable, no more. Jennie Hughes does capitally as the humorous Eliza, and Mlle. Jarbeau, if she would tone down her grimaces, apparently her substitute for piquancy of expression, would make an agreeable Arabella. Francesca Guthrie makes a very pleasing personation of Phœbe, acting with considerable expression, although with hardly as much spirit and "go" as her predecessor. Her voice is an agreeable one, but apparently weak in the lower notes. Her performance of the guileless charity girl is a very interesting one, however, and worth praising. The chorus, which could hardly be improved on, remains the same as before, and the St. Felix Sisters continue to win applause by their admirable dancing. The opera as given by the new company has certainly lots of attraction in it, and on Friday evening will have reached its one hundredth performance at this house. It is only contemplated to keep it on for a short time longer, or until warm weather kills its drawing power.

FOR TREASURER MCCOY'S BENEFIT in the Grand Opera-house in the afternoon of May 30 the following well-known artists have volunteered their services: J. B. Studley and Kate Meek in the prison-scene of "La Tour de Nesle;" Ben Maginley as Cousin Joe in "The Rough Diamond; J. H. Ryan as Christopher Strap in "A Pleasant Neighbor;" John E. McDonough as Michael in "The Adopted Child;" Nat Goodwin will give imitations of popular actors; George S. Knight in his Dutch specialties; Annie Pixley is to sing popular songs; John Hart in negro specialties; and Herrmann in feats of magic. The attractions are strong, and the attendance should be large.

ALTHOUGH there was a falling-off in the attendance at Haverly's Fourteenth-street Theatre at the opening of the second week of M. B. Curtis' engagement, still it was good.

THE SEASON AT THE PARK THEATRE is to close May 28, "The Mascot" continuing the attraction. Business is only fair.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of the speedy withdrawal of "Hazel Kirke" at the Madison-square Theatre has had a tendency to increase business, a good-sized audience being present 23.

THE COMPANY engaged to play "The Professor" in the Madison-square Theatre for the Summer season, commencing June 1, includes the Misses Georgie Cayvan, Nellie Taylor, Nellie Morant, Marie Chester, Belle Melville, Josephine Bailey, Belle Jackson, Maud Stewart and Helen Ottolengui, Messrs. W. H. Gillette, Leslie Allen, C. W. Butler, E. L. Tilton, Harry Lacy, D. H. Chase, A. Waldron and Harry Hogan.

THE VOKES FAMILY began the last week of their season in the Union-square Theatre May 23, producing after "Cousin Joe" their specialty of "The Wrong Man in the Right Place."

THE WILBUR OPERA COMPANY opened the fourth week of "The Mascot" in the Bijou Opera-house 23 to good business.

NIBLO'S GARDEN continues closed. Manager A. Bernis, it is said, is still awaiting remittances from Spain.

A NEW OPERA—"Elfius and Mermaid," we believe, is the title decided on—is to succeed "Billee Taylor" at the Standard Theatre shortly. The words and music are by a Mr. Browne, to fame unknown, to whom Mr. Henderson sublets the house.

THE BENEFIT to Helen Lenoir, the manager of D'Oyly Carte's companies in this country, took place at the Standard Theatre afternoon of May 19. The programme included an act each from "The Pirates of Penzance," "Pinafore" and "Billee Taylor."

RICE'S "EVANGELINE" COMBINATION began a week's season in the Grand Opera-house May 23, and the moderate attendance evinced that its attractiveness is on the wane. After the close of the present season "Evangeline" will no longer be seen upon the dramatic stage, as Mr. Rice has sold it to Ernest Stanley, who will next season present it in variety theatres. Under these circumstances, and because some changes have been made in the cast during the past season, the distribution of characters is given in full: Evangeline, Miss Rose Dana; Gabriel, Miss Louise Searle; Catherine, G. K. Fortescue; Eulalie, Miss Jessie Calef; Felician, Miss Jennie Calef; Le Blanc, Ed. Chapman; Captain Dietrich, Max Figman; Bazil, King Boorioboola Gha, Horace Frail; Lone Fisherman, George A. Schillar; Hans Wagner, Miss Pauline Hall-Policeman, Fred Turner; Jailor, Mr. Rochester; Floraletta, Miss Ella Winner; Conductor, George Cohen; Lo the Poor Indian, H. M. Morse; Hellosqueezer, Miss Nellie Anderson; Knockemendways, Miss Albertine Hall; First Fisherman, Miss Maud Girieux; Second Fisherman, Miss Summerville. Tony Pastor's Company closed 21, having played to very large business throughout the week. Hoey & Hardie's "Child of the State" Combination are to begin a week's season 30.

THE LARGE NUMBER OF PROFESSIONALS who daily congregate about Union-square show that the season has wellnigh terminated.

JOHN DENIER was presented by his wife with a son April 21.

Hunt's Company as support. This company opened a season of five nights and two matinees 17, the repertory being "Fanchon," "Violet," "East Lynne" and "The Pearl of Savoy." Miss Hunt was best as Marie in the last play. It was intended to have brought out Sidney Rosenfeld's new play "Florine!" 20, but the company were unable to get up in the piece in time. It will, instead, have its initial presentation in Cynthiana, Ky., 25. Business was extremely light. Treasurer Harry Lewis had a crowded house for his benefit 16. A Washington gentleman wishes the tragedy to be transferred in its entirety to the Capital, and a single performance given; and it is also stated that a theatrical manager wishes to take it upon the road for eight weeks next season. ATKINS LAWRENCE was put on trial in the Philadelphia courts May 20 on the charge of desertion, preferred by his wife, Louise, who testified that he deserted her last Summer because she wouldn't accompany him on a yachting trip, whereupon he took in her place a young lady named Annie Gilfillan. On his return Mrs. Lawrence refused to live with him because of his association with that young damsel. She sued Lawrence shortly after for support, and the matter was settled by his promising her ten dollars per week, but only paid the amount for one week. Atkins testified that he had tried to persuade his wife to live with him. After his return from his pleasure trip last Summer she wrote and asked him to meet her. He did so, and asked her: "Where is your diamond ring?" which he saw was not in its place on her finger. She replied: "I pawned it, but can get it back again." He said: "When you do I will live with you." She asked him to give her $10 per week, which he refused to do, asking her to live with him. That she said she would never do. He had no money, but kept a horse and carriage to travel through the country with to support himself by practicing dentistry during the Summer solstice. On cross-examination he said that he had been indicted for bigamy; that he had lived with his wife for eight years, though he had only been married to her for three; that he loves her and wants her to live with him; and that he has heard shameful reports about her, but doesn't want to attack her good name. Counsel for Mrs. L. challenged him to do so, when he said that, though he had given her but $10, she was wearing ten-dollar shoes and dresses costing $200 each, but he supposed she had a wealthy relative. The case went over for a week, that more witnesses might be summoned, Lawrence being allowed to go upon his own recognizance.

JOSEPH J. MARTIN, treasurer of Philadelphia, has brought suit on behalf the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania against the owners and lessees of the Walnut-street, Chestnut-street, Lyceum, North Broad-street and Grand Central Theatres; the Chestnut-street Opera-house, Miller's Winter Garden and Wood's Museum, to obtain the license-fee of $500, claimed to be due from each of them under legislative acts of April 16, 1845, and May 15, 1850. It is rather amusing that the North Broad-street Theatre should be included in the list, as there is no such building in existence, it having been torn down many months ago by its owner, J. S. Crossy; but the fact is that this suit-bringing against owners and managers is a time-honored farce that is played every season.

THE NEW OPERA-HOUSE in Lawrence, Mass., situated in front of and over the passenger-station of the Boston and Lowell Railroad, on Essex street, built and owned by that corporation, is nearly completed, and is soon to be opened by J. W. Lanergan as its first manager. Our Boston correspondent says: "It is an ornamental structure on the exterior, the pressed brick of which it is constructed being faced with granite trimmings. The theatre is reached by two staircases, each ten feet wide, leading up to the rear and sides of the auditorium. The lobbies are three in number, the first being 118 feet long and 24 feet wide, and the others 24 by 24 feet. The auditorium is 100 feet long, 85 feet wide and 60 feet from floor to ceiling, and nearly oval in form. The color used in decoration is principally cream, the dome being partly of blue, twelve panels of which, painted in a diaper pattern, can be removed for ventilation and light. The four fixed panels have painted on them figures representing Melpomene, Thalia, Euterpe and Terpsichore on an old-gold background. The walls of the house are frescoed and finished with dados. Artificial light will be supplied by a 100-burner chandelier hung from the dome and numerous clusters arranged on the walls. The woodwork of the audience-room is of Western ash, highly polished; the proscenium arch is painted in old gold and high colors, and two private boxes on each side are trimmed with old-gold plush and maroon satin. The front of the single balcony is ornamented with an iron railing of gilded iron, and the floor of this, as well as the lower part of the theatre, is so inclined than an excellent view of the stage may be had from all portions. Folding-chairs, framed in iron, with perforated backs and seats, are provided in all parts. The seating capacity, not including the boxes, is 1,352, 558 being accommodated in the parquet, 310 in the circle, 618 in the balcony, and 36 in the orchestra. Much space is allowed the occupants of seats, and there is ample room in the aisles, which communicate with five doors opening into the lobbies. The stage is 92 feet wide, 5 feet deep, and 38 feet high, with a proscenium opening 38 by 38 feet. The stage is well fitted up with all the latest devices, four sets of grooves admitting the use of flats eighteen feet high. There are six dressing-rooms on the stage and five up one flight of stairs, all well lighted and furnished and supplied with hot and cold water. The curtain is of maroon terry, and the act-drop represents a view on the St. John's River, Florida, painted by D. O. Story of Boston, who has also furnished a complete set of scenery. A steam elevator of sufficient size to carry a horse, if necessary, runs from the ground to the stage level, and all baggage, scenery and properties of traveling companies can be landed within the theatre. Steam heat will warm the theatre, and the ventilation is said to be completely satisfactory. Exits from the stage as well as from the auditorium are thought to be sufficient even in case of panic, five windows, one-story high, opening on to the roof of an adjoining building."

With the addition of a new balcony it will now accommodate 1,734 persons, with seats now arranged in the most advantageous manner. The entertainment presented consisted of the farce 'Smith vs. Brown' and the pantomimes 'The Village Smithy' and 'Robert Macaire,' performed by J. S. Maffitt, Robert Fraser, W. H. Bartholomew, J. A. Page, J. Mullen, J. A. Greene, Albert Julien, Pauline and Gabrielle Martinetti, Marie Langley, Carrie Williams and J. Greene. A NEW OPERA-HOUSE.—The Boyd Opera-house, Omaha, Neb., will, it is thought, be ready for occupancy about Sept. 5. It is to be composed of St. Louis pressed brick and stone. The main entrance will be twenty-nine feet wide. Ten steps lead up to the vestibule—twenty by twenty-nine—where the box-office, flanked by a manager's office on either side, stands, facing the vestibule. Both entrance and vestibule are paved with encaustic tiling, and the walls and ceiling are richly painted in oil colors, and plate-mirrors are set in the walls. The entrance to the first gallery is from the left side of the lobby. The upper gallery is gained through a separate entrance on Farnam street. The ticket-office for the upper gallery is also distinct. In the rear, opening from the six-foot alley, is the wide hallway for the actors' entrance, from which a hydraulic elevator lifts the baggage. An exit-door is built on the east side, leading from the auditorium, to be used only in case of fire. The auditorium is seventy-four feet wide and sixty-five feet deep from the line of the curtain to the wall in the rear of the promenade. The line of sight is perfect, so that every seat commands a full view of the whole stage. The proscenium opening will be thirty-four feet wide and of a like height, surmounted by panels painted with scenes from various dramas. There will be six proscenium boxes, three on each side of the stage, rising in single tiers, each box seating from ten to fifteen persons, and each elegantly furnished. The seating capacity is 1,680 in the body of the house, exclusive of the boxes, being divided as follows: Parquet and dress-circle, 680; first gallery, 400; upper gallery, 600. The parquet and dress-circle and first gallery will be furnished with folding opera-chairs, upholstered in the best style. The stage will be forty-five feet deep by seventy-four feet wide, and well stocked with scenery. The drop-curtain and scenes will be drawn up—not rolled—into the rigging loft, for which an extra story is built over the stage. Noxon, Halley & Toomey are the scenic-artists. Under the stage are a music-room and six large dressing-rooms, all well lighted. In addition to these are star dressing-rooms and property-rooms back of the proscenium boxes. The dressing-rooms are supplied with hot and cold water, closets, etc. The building will be heated by steam throughout. In front of the stage and sunk below the floor of the auditorium will be the place for the orchestra. It is the intention of the management to employ a band of not less than twelve pieces permanently. Mr. Boyd, the proprietor, will retain the management, and has engaged R. L. Marsh, formerly of Milwaukee and Chicago, as his assistant and business-manager. The house will be supplied with competent stage-carpenters, stage-hands, ushers and doorkeepers.

IN RESPONSE to an invitation from Robert Tagg, lessee and manager, a CLIPPER representative visited the Mœnnerchor Garden, Philadelphia, May 23, to inspect the almost completed improvements, which are now receiving a few finishing touches, prior to the opening of the Summer-night concert season June 6. First of all on entering the garden, attention is attracted to the music-stand, which occupies the northwest corner. It consists of sounding-boards built in sections, is in the form of half an egg-shell, will accommodate about forty musicians, and is entirely inclosed, except at the large end, which faces obliquely towards the balcony of the club-house, on the east. This balcony is entirely new, and will seat comfortably about 600 persons. It is intended to afford protection in case of rain, as well as to receive the overflow of music-lovers from the garden when the latter becomes too crowded. Access to it is gained by a very wide central staircase, from which two branch stairways wind off right and left. Beneath these staircases grottoes have been constructed of rocks, covered with moss and clinging vines. Beneath the balcony is a cemented flooring, upon which in the northeast corner stands the bar, to the north of which is a retiring and toilet room for gentlemen, a similar one for ladies being entered from the balcony. In front of the music-stand a flag-pole is reared, and from it will float the starry banner. Fragrant flowers, tropical plants, singing birds and ornamental designs in gas-jets will lend their aid to make the garden and balcony attractive. The old club-house still remains, and the restaurant and bar continue features of it, as heretofore. The music will be furnished by twenty-five Teutons, directed by Carl Sentz; and Mr. Tagg says that it is his present intention to have them play as a military band on some nights and as an orchestra on others.

Our correspondent says: "The company is composed entirely of amateurs, and to do justice to such a difficult work could hardly be expected. "L'AFRIQUE," a new satirical, comical opera, composed by Wayman McCreery, libretto by Wm. Schuyler (both of St. Louis, Mo.), was first presented on any stage in the Olympic Theatre, in that city, May 16, and, says our correspondent, "was fairly successful artistically, and entirely so financially. The attendance increased from the start, culminating on Friday night, when the house was crowded to the doors. The cast was as follows, the singers having been selected from local church choirs: Georgina Montague-Jones, Cora Carpenter; Alice, her maid, Pauline Schuler; Lieut. De Bracy, Phil Branson; Capt. Montague-Jones, Ed. Dierkes; Mynheer Zwickenboot, Alf. Pointdexter; Sergeant Tops, W. G. Smyth. Prof. A. G. Robyn was director and Geo. B. Berrall served as stage-manager. The action takes place in Africa during England's Zulu War, and the story tells of the love between Georgina and De Bracy, and the difficulties attending their getting the father's (Capt. Jones) consent to their union. The music is bright and sparkling, but the libretto lacks the interest and wit necessary to a comic opera. No further performances have been decided on."

CABINET ORGANS.—There are numerous firms throughout this country who advertise cabinet or parlor organs claiming superiority from facilities of manufacture, when in reality they never were manufacturers of any portion of an organ, and are simply agents and middlemen for firms who dare not, owing to the inferior quality of their instruments, advertise them over their own names. It is a well-known fact that the United States leads the world in the manufacture of organs in quality of tone, excellence of mechanism and beauty of design, and no manufacturer stands higher in every respect than the Hon. Daniel F. Beatty of Washington, New Jersey, whose manufactory is now the largest in the world that ships direct. This enterprising gentleman was the first to offer the music-loving populace an opportunity to purchase direct of the manufacturer, thereby saving the public the enormous profits of agents and middlemen. He has made many liberal offers, and has never failed to keep every promise, and, more, we have yet to receive the first complaint from any of our readers who have dealt with him. His last and grandest offer outstrips all others, and is an evidence of his unparalleled success. The Beethoven organ is the most brilliant and powerful musical combination ever perfected, and its superiority over all other organs is attained by the valuable patent stop-action held only by Mr. Beatty. The reader should bear in mind that the "Beethoven," which is shipped on one month's trial, has 27 stops, 10 full sets of golden-tongue reeds, and is in every respect and detail the finest instrument in the world. The price at which the Beethoven is offered, $90, which includes stool, book and music, must bring it within the reach of everyone.—Exchange. For further information our readers are referred to the advertisement on another page.

After his arrest he said that he had been paid $10 by a saloon-keeper to set fire to the theatre, for the reason that the Bijou was interfering with the saloon-keeper's trade. FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

"The Member for Slocum," a farcical comedy in three acts, founded upon "Le Supplice d'un Homme," by George R. Sims, was produced in the Royalty Theatre, London, May 4, and scored a brilliant success. The original piece has ere now furnished material for the farce-writer, but the version under review is by no means a bald translation. The French farce has been thoroughly Anglicized, and the dialogue is original and teems with wit and humor, pure and wholesome and void of offense. The scene of the first act is in the apartments at Westminster of Onesimus Epps, M. P., the Member for Slocum nominally; but the real "Member" is his mother-in-law, Mrs. Jeffs. She writes his speeches—he studies and delivers them. It is ten o'clock A. M., and Mrs. Epps is seen with mamma eagerly scanning the morning papers to learn what has kept the Member from home again all night. As they expected, there has been another all-night sitting. The Home-rulers have been vexing the soul of Epps in Parliament, and there are other home-rulers to make matters unpleasant for him when he returns to the domestic hearth. His excuses do not avail him much, and his mother-in-law and his wife, too, read him a very severe lecture. It is easy to see that the conscience of Epps is not at rest, and the delivery to him of telegrams innumerable—telegrams which he is not too willing to take—reveals the fact that he has a mystery. He presently has a visitor in the person of his old friend Bill Smith, his companion in the happy past in many a "spree." Smith is of so candid a disposition that the Member for Slocum is led to reflect that he has introduced into the house "a Bill that stands a very good chance of being thrown out," for this Bill shocks the ladies—particularly the mother-in-law—by replying to their question "Are you married?" with the words "Very nearly!" He proceeds to tell how he has been married; how his wife has proved literary and strong-minded, and partial to "cock-and-hen clubs," the very mention of such things causes Mrs. Jeff to shriek. Have they had "a judicial separation?" asks mother-in-law. "A judicious one," answers Bill Smith. Poor Epps is ordered to get rid of his friend as soon as possible, but he seizes the first opportunity to consult him concerning his "mystery." He is, it appears, persecuted by a lady. Quite by accident, while walking on the Embankment, he has trodden on her dress. He has apologized, and she has recognized in him the champion of the fair sex, "at whose feet over his head," as she afterwards puts it, she has sat in the gallery of the House of Commons. For be it said here that the speeches of Epps, having been written by his mother-in-law, invariably relate to the Emancipation of Women or to the Married Women's Property Act, or to some kindred subject. The fair unknown has taken him captive; has enrolled him on the staff of her new paper, The Amazon; has dragged him into her club; has "stood" him supper; has made him dance with her; has kept him at that club half the night; and has compelled him to fall back for excuse upon the lucky obstruction in the House of Commons. When Bill smith has taken his departure the "Member's" fair tormentor makes her appearance. He has promised to sup with her again. She demands the fulfillment of his promise that very night. "If you don't come I'll fetch you" is her parting cry, and as the curtain descends for the first time we hear poor Epps exclaiming—as he hopes for another all-night sitting—"If the House rises tonight I'm a lost man" The second act brings us, with the Member for Slocum, to the rooms of his persecutor, on Adelphi Terrace, and we—not the "Member"—are allowed to learn particulars of her little scheme. She is none other than the strong-minded literary wife of Bill Smith. It is Onesimus Epps to whom she is in part indebted for separation from her husband, for appointments at the Club or elsewhere have ever afforded Bill Smith excuses for absence from home, and have led to estrangement and ultimate separation. She loves her husband, and she proposes to be revenged on his friend, the Member for Slocum, and to make him the means for bringing about a reconciliation. It is the evening of quarter-day, and, as she expects, her husband comes to bring her her allowance, even while she sits at supper with Onesimus Epps. She conceals the Member for Slocum behind the curtains; and when her husband, having handed over the money, would coolly take his departure, she seeks to retain him by arousing his jealousy. "There is a man concealed there," she cries, pointing to the curtains. Bill Smith is not to be caught again in the matrimonial chains in that fashion. "No," he argues; "if a man were there she wouldn't tell me," and he wishes her "Good-evening." The rest of this act, which is the weakest of the three, is ultra-farcical, and shows us Arathusa—that is Mrs. Smith's name—calling upon the Member for Slocum to fly with her, indulging in hysterics and frightening him out of the house, and almost out of his wits, by pretending to commit suicide by leaping from the window. In the third act the complications come thick and fast, and the audience fairly screamed with hilarity from beginning to end. The scene is the "Member's" house and grounds at Richmond. Too much space would be required to detail all the incidents. Suffice it to say that the peace of mind of the Member for Slocum is widely disturbed when Arathusa turns up again; that he gets her into the house, and is sorely puzzled how to get her out again; that his mother-in-law "smells a rat" when she sees him and his friend Bill Smith concealing female habiliments; that Bill Smith determines to "tell a whopper" to get his friend out of a scrape; that he declares the concealed female is his own wife; that he is greatly surprised when he finds she is; and that in the end there is reconciliation all round.

"NANA" was produced in Brussels May 3 before an overflowing audience, which was curious rather than enthusiastic.

TWO NEW PIECES were produced at the Vaudeville, Paris, May 4. "La Drame de la Gare de l'Ouest," a three-act comedy by M. Durantin, was an utter failure. A trifle entitled "La Petite Sœur" achieved success. Its point is: Of two sisters the elder proposes to sacrifice her own happiness to that of the younger; but the latter discovers the secret, and it is she who brings about the marriage of the noble-minded Louise with the man she loves.

MR. CHARLES OVERTON,
TREMENDOUS HIT AT BALDWIN'S, SAN FRANCISCO.
ENGAGED BY W. HORACE LINGARD. 1-13t*

"FUN ON THE BRISTOL; OR,
A NIGHT ON THE SOUND."

Fresh from their recent triumphs in New York City, Jarrett & Rice's renowned "Fun on the Bristol" Combination have just concluded a remarkably brilliant engagement at the Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, the house being overcrowded at each performance. This "Fun on the Bristol" Company is no commonplace organization of vocal and comic talent. The ripe theatrical experience of Mr. A. Bond Jarrett, extending over a period of a quarter of a century, has gathered in one company the cream of the variety and burlesque talent to be found in America, and the present troupe is known all over the United States, comprising such brilliant and popular artists as J. F. Sheridan, the great character-actor; Agnes Halleck and Kate Castleton, sopranos; Myron Calice, tenor; Marion Fiske, Wm. Hughes, Frank Tannehill Jr., Richard Waldron, Mark Smith, Master Linden and others. The company is on the road for the Summer season, and will appear next at Cleveland, and will proceed from there to San Francisco, giving performances at Omaha, Cheyenne, Sacramento and other cities en route to California.

While in Philadelphia Mr. Jarrett and some members of his company stopped at the West-end Hotel, on Chestnut street, near Sixteenth, and it was there the writer had the pleasure of dining with the distinguished manager a day or two since. We were seated at a private table, going through a rather extensive bill-of-fare and discussing our claret, when we were joined by Miss Agnes Halleck, the talented soprano of the "Fun on the Bristol" Party. The conversation was conducted on general principles, and after a variety of topics, mostly of a professional character, had been discussed, the reporter happened to question Mr. Jarrett as to the condition of his physical health, feeling that the question was a superfluous one, for the manager looked the very picture of robust health; but in answer he said: "Oh, my general health is excellent, and I have no physical ailment except an occasional attack of that old enemy of mine—rheumatism." I remarked: "People nowadays need not suffer long from rheumatic attacks, as they can be readily driven away. I know a positive cure for rheumatism." Mr. Jarrett said: "I guess you mean St. Jacob's Oil." I said "Yes," and was about to recommend the Great German Remedy, when the manager anticipated me by saying: "I know as much about that remedy as you do. Why, I am never without it, for it is the only thing that ever does me any good when I get a twinge of rheumatism. It is used by several members of our company, and I consider that liniment the best thing for outward application for rheumatic attacks ever discovered. I am acquainted with A. Vogeler & Co. of Baltimore, the proprietors of St. Jacob's Oil, and I can say they did a good thing for suffering humanity when they placed that remedy on the market. Any person who is suffering from rheumatism and fails to use St. Jacob's Oil deserves to suffer—that is all I have got to say."

Mr. Jarrett then turned to Miss Agnes Halleck and remarked: "Miss Halleck, I think you used St. Jacob's Oil. Did you not?"

The lady addressed, the soprano of the troupe, is a well-known singer and operatic and burlesque actress. She has been on the operatic stage for several years, and has been connected with Mrs. Oates' Comic-opera Troupe, Grau's Opera Co., and has sung in different parts of the country with Miss Clara Louise Kellogg. She sang for some time in Montreal, and is favorably known in the profession. In reply to Mr. Jarrett's question Miss Halleck said: "Well, I am like you. I use St. Jacob's Oil often, and always take it with me when I go on a professional tour. I am sometimes greatly troubled with rheumatic attacks in my feet, and it was a long time before I could get anything to do me any good. At times I would be unable to walk, and my sleep at night was often interfered with. It is now some time since I learned that some of our company had been using St. Jacob's Oil—you among the number (to Mr. Jarrett)—and I resolved to try a bottle of the remedy. I was greatly surprised at the result; for before the bottle was half empty I felt a decided cessation of the pain, and I continued using the Oil until I felt perfectly well. Now, whenever I feel anything like a rheumatic pain coming on in my feet, I go to my trunk and get my bottle of St. Jacob's Oil and rub my feet with it, and the pain quickly vanishes. I do not know how many members of our company use St. Jacob's Oil, but I know Miss Castleton does, and I know also that our tenor, Mr. Myron Calice, holds it in very high estimation."

Mr. Jarrett, then addressing me, said: "If you want to find out anything further about what our people think of St. Jacob's Oil, you had better look in at the Walnut-street Theatre this evening, and Miss Halleck will post you. I will not be there myself, as I leave for Baltimore this evening."

For the double purpose of enjoying an evening's amusement, and at the same time extending my knowledge of the benefits to be derived from using St. Jacob's Oil, I was at the Walnut-street Theatre that evening, and between the acts of "Fun on the Bristol" I was enabled to gain the following additional information about the Great German Remedy.

Miss Kate Castleton is the leading soprano of the "Fun on the Bristol" Company, and the honors are shared between her and Miss Halleck. In the piece named Miss Castleton sustains the parts of Romeo Rattlesnake, a swell, Paw Lean and Arabella Vivandiere, an American Turk-ey.

This lady sang for several seasons at the Boston Athenæum, when she became very popular. As well as being a superior singer, Miss C. is an excellent character actress. I learned from this lady that her experience with regard to the use of St. Jacob's Oil was almost identical with that of Miss Halleck. She has suffered severely from pains of different kinds, either brought on by contracting colds or of a rheumatic character, and she says the only thing that ever does her any good is St. Jacob's Oil. Miss Castleton heartily recommended the liniment to all persons who suffer from rheumatism, and she was of opinion that the more it was used the less suffering there would be. In conclusion she said: "I intend to take some of it with me to California, for I do not want to be without it, and I am not sure it can be obtained in that far-off place."

I was then introduced to Mr. Myron Calice, the tenor of the company. Mr. Calice is a tenor singer of rare powers, and he is a very important member of "The Fun on the Bristol" party. He is very versatile, and sustains the parts of Capoul Sparks, Campan-out-a H. M. opera, Herr Ludwig, a Dutch Turk, and Faust. As soon as the subject of St. Jacob's Oil was mentioned Mr. Calice grew enthusiastic at once and said: "Nothing like that remedy for rheumatism was ever discovered." Mr. C. then remarked that he not only uses it whenever he has anything like a rheumatic attack, but he finds it good for other affections. He said: "It is absolutely necessary for me to take the best care of my voice, for I make my living by it. Whenever I feel any sensation of any kind in my throat, such as an incipient sore throat or anything of that kind, the first thing I do is to rub my throat with St. Jacob's Oil, and I generally get speedy relief. It invariably helps me when I get anything like an attack of rheumatism, and as long as I can obtain a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil I have no fear of any rheumatic attacks." I then learned that Mr. Calice had such a high opinion of St. Jacob's Oil as a preventive or cure of pain that he wanted everybody to know about it, and for the purpose of doing what he could to popularize the remedy he went so far as to allude to the liniment every evening on the stage while performing his part. I waited to see if what I heard was true, and I noticed that in the last act of "Fun on the Bristol" Mr. Calice makes mention of St. Jacob's Oil in a manner that attracted the attention of the entire audience, and which created considerable applause.

KERNAN'S NEW MONUMENTAL THEATRE,

BALTIMORE, MD.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Manager's Office, May 2, 1881.

CIRCULAR ADDRESS.

The present being the final month of an extremely successful season, the Management of KERNAN'S NEW MONUMENTAL THEATRE would respectfully call the attention of MANAGERS, STARS AND COMBINATIONS to the advantages appertaining to an engagement in his Theatre: PRIMARILY.—The Handsomest, Best Equipped and Completest in all details of any Theatre South of New York, and comparing favorably in comfort and elegance with any in the country. The seating capacity is extensive, and at the same time possesses an attractive degree of home-like ease that has aided very materially in making this the popular theatre of Baltimore City. SECONDLY.—Its Stage Conveniences and Appointments are of the very best construction. The Dressing-rooms are well lighted, commodious, and fitted with every appliance and appurtenance suggested with a due regard for the convenience of performers. The entire theatre, with its extensive stage, is kept with a degree of order and cleanliness unapproachable by any similar establishment, together with competent and attentive attaches, who know their business in all its various departments. THIRDLY.—The General Sharing Terms or Certainty offered, together with liberal and unstinted advertisements and a magnanimity in dressing the stage and assisting the entertainment, are a few of the principal reasons for claiming precedence for our New, Commodious and Beautiful Theatre.

The following well known Stars and Combinations are among those which have played most Successful Engagements with us during the Season of 1880 and 1881: Miss Anna Ward Tiffany, Mr. Dominick Murray, Miss Fanny Louise Buckingham, Miss Marion Mordaunt, Mr. J. Z. Little, Rents-Santley Combination (twice), Mr. Sid. C. France, Mr. Sam'l K. Chester and wife, Mr. N. S. Wood (twice), Mr. Joseph Proctor, Alonzo Brothers, Big "4" Combination, Mr. E. T. Goodrich, Gilmour & Burton's Combination, W. J. Thompson's Electric Lights, Robert Butler's Pantomime Company, Hyde & Behman's Combination (twice), Nick Roberts' Humpty Dumpty Co., Harry Miner and Pat Rooney's Combination, Leavitt's Gigantics, Snelbaker's Majestic Consolidation, Comedy "4" Combination, Mr. George R. Edeson and Company, Around the World in 80 Days Company, the Celebrities Company, Fieldings' Yacht Club Company, etc.

I am now filling dates for the Season of 1881 and 1882, and cordially invite correspondence with a view to that purpose from ALL FIRST-CLASS DRAWING STARS AND COMBINATIONS. Respectfully, [10-1t] JAS. L. KERNAN, Sole manager.

W. C. COUP'S COMBINED SHOWS are to exhibit in Cincinnati May 25, 26, 27, 28, on the baseball grounds, Louisville, Ky., 30, 31, New Albany, Ind., June 1,

SPECULATORS DEFEATED.—The Barnum, Bailey & Hutchinson Show has been followed some time past by a number of speculators, who by accumulating a quantity of tickets purchased in various towns were enabled to put them on sale at a premium in other places before the regular ticket-office was opened. The circus-managers, being determined to defeat them, caused new tickets to be printed and issued a different kind for each performance, all being dated. The new tickets were first used in Bridgeport, Ct., May 16, and agents of the shew cautioned the public not to purchase tickets of the speculators, as they would not be received at the door. That night the speculators were ready to surrender. A conference was had, and the circus-managers redeemed what tickets the speculators had secured during the week's season in Brooklyn, and they signed an agreement to give up the business.

FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.—The widow of Major Burnell, whose death was recorded in our past issue, is in destitute circumstances in this city, the Major's long illness having exhausted his pecuniary means. It is believed that there are many persons in the circus profession who would gladly contribute "their mite" for the temporary relief of Mrs. Burnell, who is advanced in years. All such can send their contributions directly to the lady, in care of the Occidental Hotel, corner of Broome street and the Bowery, New York City, and the proprietor will see that all letters reach her.

FRANK DE LANEY, magician and Punch-and-Judy performer, is now engaged with Shelby, Pullman & Hamilton's Circus and Menagerie.

R. H. WHITTAKER, hurdle-rider, and F. Welch, Indian-rider, who both have horses, can be engaged. See card.

HILLIARD & DEMOTT'S PACIFIC CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE showed in Howard City, Mich., May 23, Marley 24; thence to Big Rapids 25, White Cloud 26, Luddington 27, Pentwater 28, Muskegon 29.

ACROBATS AND GYMNASTS are wanted for a traveling party. See R. S. Cox's card.

MAIN & CO.'S NEW INTERNATIONAL CIRCUS exhibited in Wellsville, O., May 17, Liverpool 18, Sloons 19, Wellsburg, W. Va., 20, Martin's Ferry, O., 21, Bridgeport 23, Bellaire 24, Moundsville, W. Va., 25.

EDWARD WITTING, press-agent, joined Batcheller & Doris' Show at Allentown, Pa., May 21.

CANDY BUTCHERS are wanted for the Miles Orton Show. Address R. Z. Orton, as per advertisement.

A SUIT WAS BEGUN in Evansville, Ind., May 21, against Adam Forepaugh, by County-treasurer Britton, to obtain a license-fee. It appears that Forepaugh paid the amount of the fee to County-auditor Warren, and got a receipt for the same, but Britton denies Warren's authority. Forepaugh gave bond in $1,000 to appear.

BARNUM, BAILEY & HUTCHINSON'S SHOW exhibited in Springfield, Mass., May 23, going to Pittsfield 25, Woonsocket, R. I., 26, Providence 27, Fall River, Mass., 28, New Bedford 30, Brockton 31, Lowell June 1, Lawrence 3, Boston 6, one week. At New Haven, Ct., May 18 the audience was dismissed after one-half of the performance had been carried out, owing to the storm. Afterwards a portion of the canvas was blown down.

THE COMMITTEE ON LICENSES of the Boston City Government has notified P. T. Barnum & Co. that the catapult act cannot be performed in that city on pain of revoking the license for exhibitihg.

P. T. BARNUM has presented the village of Bethel, Ct., with a drinking-fountain.

BATCHELLER & DORIS' CIRCUS is reported to be doing an excellent business this season, and the following notices testify to the popularity of the show:

Batcheller & Doris' Great Interocean Show is one of the finest that has ever visited this city.—Allentown News and Chronicle.

Their success so far is simply marvelous, as many times they were unable to seat all of their audiences.—Easton Daily Argus.

The management of Batcheller & Doris' Circus may fairly be congratulated on the fact that they have succeeded in organizing a street-parade which is interesting and attractive, and likely to give the spectators a favorable impression of the show. Thousands of people crowded the sidewalks and lined the route of the parade this morning, and ladies and children, attracted by the bright, clear weather, made up a large proportion of the immense crowd. Wagon-loads from the country contributed their quota to the throng, and the trains on the various railroads brought hundreds of visitors from the towns adjacent. Jersey sent its crowd of swains and maidens and children, and the country boys and girls went mooning around hand-in-hand in a state of rapturous amazement, and cracked peanuts and chewed and chewed with industry and fervent enjoyment. The music in the parade was excellent, and the dusky Indian maidens and warriors, the jubilee-singers, the performing lions, the camels, the warriors and the lady who sits enthroned in the midst of them, all had their admirers in the big crowd. And after the circus parade was over then another parade began—a parade of the great crowd through the streets and out to the circus grounds. Northampton and all the principal thoroughfares were thronged throughout the day, and presented a lively appearance with the moving throng. * * * * * There was a large attendance at the circus this afternoon, and the performance appeared to give general satisfaction. The features of the performance were the juggling act by Satsuma, the performing dogs, the comicalities of the clown, John Patterson, the Siegrist Children and the Rice Brothers. This evening the performance will be augmented by the addition of three German athletes, who joined the show to-day. The evolutions of the horses in the grand entree this afternoon were beautiful and provoked applause, and the music excellent.—Easton Daily Express.

HARRY G. RICHMOND
AND HIS
GREAT COMEDY & SPECIALTY TROUPE

One of the most successful engagements that ever took place at the National Theatre in Philadelphia has just been brought to a close, and consisted of the performances of the well-known specialty actor Harry G. Richmond and his great troupe of male and female artists. After making a tour of the principal cities and towns of Pennsylvania, the Harry G. Richmond Comedy and Specialty Co. will fulfill engagements in Buffalo, Baltimore, New York, Boston, etc. The company is an extraordinary one, and Mr. Richmond himself is the well-known original of the comedy "Our Candidate," which created such a sensation at the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, recently, and which he will reproduce next season.

The writer was introduced to Mr. Richmond by Mr. J. P. McCall, the stage-manager of the National Theatre, and by Mr. I. M. Kahnweiler, the business and press-agent of that establishment. In conversation with Mr. Richmond it was found that he had recently been suffering so much from sharp rheumatic pains in his side, shoulder and limbs, to which was added a kidney affection that caused him pain in the small of the back, that it was often with difficulty that he could fulfill his professional engagements. I talked with Mr. Richmond in his dressing-room, and he said: "I was taken with very bad feelings while playing an engagement at Bradford, Pa., and in the oil regions generally, and at times I felt so bad that I could scarcely leave my room. I had bad rheumatic attacks, and could not sleep at night, and in fact I ached all over. Nothing is worse for a theatrical man while traveling than anything like rheumatic attacks, for you cannot get the same attention you can at home, and you are constantly on the move from city to city and town to town. It is really distressing to have to appear before a large audience and perform a humorous part and feel that, while the audience may be enjoying a good laugh at your acting, you at that particular time may be suffering bodily pain. Fortunately for me, however, my wife, whose stage name is Miss Florence Stoder, was with the troupe on the professional trip alluded to, and it was her custom every night, both before and after the performance, to rub my back and sides with that excellent preparation St. Jacob's Oil, and that remedy did me a world of good. I had heard that a trapeze performer who had fallen at the National Theatre some time since while performing his feats, and who injured himself very badly, had obtained great relief by rubbing himself with St. Jacob's Oil, and it occurred to me that the remedy might do me good. I purchased a bottle and obtained relief at once, and by continuing the use of that Oil my pains nearly all left me, and I can say I feel first-rate now. Nothing did me any material good until I commenced using St. Jacob's Oil, and since that time I have kept that remedy constantly on hand, and I do not intend to be without it as long as I can command fifty cents to purchase a bottle."

While Mr. Richmond was talking, his wife (Miss Florence Stoder) entered, and was introduced to the writer. Mrs. Richmond is a young lady of prepossessing appearance, sprightly in manners, and she is an actress of considerable talent. Hearing her husband speaking about St. Jacob's Oil, she said: "That remedy did my husband a vast deal of good, and he has been much better ever since he used it. It was always gratifying to me after giving him a good rubbing with it to see how much better he felt. I think it is an invaluable liniment, and whenever I have any pains or aches of any kind I just rub myself with St. Jacob's Oil, and then I am sure to feel better. We always take it with us when we are traveling, and I would not like to be without it. Several members of our company use St. Jacob's Oil."

Turning to Mr. Richmond, I said that the different members of his company were mostly close at hand, and I asked him if he could introduce me to any of them who had used St. Jacob's Oil.

Mr. R. then called Miss Lottie Elliott. This lady is known as the world's greatest skipping-rope and endurance dancer. On being introduced and questioned, the lady said: "I often use St. Jacob's Oil, and it never fails to do me good. In my skipping-rope act I often sprain my ankle and strain my limbs. Whenever I do so now I always rub the parts affected with that Oil, and I get relief at once. Before I knew anything about St. Jacob's Oil I have suffered from sprains and strains for days at a time, and a cure was a question of time; it is not so now, for St. Jacob's Oil relieves me very soon. I am very glad I happened to try that liniment."

I was then presented to Miss Flora Moore, celebrated for her singing, dancing and dialect imitations. It is claimed that this artist can hold the stage, alone and unassisted, for forty minutes. Miss Moore also bore her testimony to the superior merits of St. Jacob's Oil. She said she considered it a really wonderful preparation, from the fact that it acts so quickly. She said she often strains herself while dancing, and when she does she goes to her room and rubs herself with St. Jacob's Oil, and she remarked: "That is all I have to do, for it kills the effects of a strain in a very short time."

The next artist introduced by Mr. Richmond was Dewit Cooke, known as the King of Clubs. This performer is noted for his extraordinary manipulations of Indian clubs, etc. With reference to St. Jacob's Oil this gentleman said when questioned: "It can readily be understood that my club exercise is of a very violent character, and I often strain the muscles of my arms and back very badly. I am also subject to severe pains in the shoulder, and formerly I would not be able to appear in public for a time owing to strains, etc. Now, whenever I strain myself, I rush for my bottle of St. Jacob's Oil, and after giving myself a good rubbing I recover very quickly. I have tried many liniments in my time, but I can say I never found anything half as good as St. Jacob's Oil. The great merit of that Oil is that you do not have to wait long for it to take effect. It acts almost at once, and that is what makes it so valuable to men of my profession."

Billy Carter, the famous banjo-solo artist, was then called up, and he had his story to say regarding St. Jacob's Oil. He said he had often used it for rheumatic pains, and it never failed to give him almost immediate relief.

Mr. Richmond was about to introduce still other members of his company who had used the Great German Remedy, but the writer declined, as he felt he had heard enough to convince him that the Great German Remedy is a wonderful preparation, and that it will speedily cure rheumatism.

TARRANT'S
COMPOUND EXTRACT
CUBEBS AND COPAIBA.

This compound is superior to any preparation hitherto invented, combining in a very highly concentrated state the medical properties of the Cubebs and Copaiba. One recommendation this preparation enjoys over all others is its neat, portable form, put up in pots; the mode in which it may be taken is both pleasant and convenient, being in the form of a paste, tasteless, and does not impair the digestion. Prepared only by TARRANT & CO., Druggists and Chemists, 278 & 280 Greenwich street, New York. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS. 2 tf eow that ships its products direct to the purchaser, avoiding extortionate profits, middlemen and agents, manufacturing my own Organs in my own factory, and being sure of selling thousands of this charming style every month. It is of solid walnut with extra large fancy top decorated with original designs in fret work. Receptacle for music, book rack, music holder of chaste design, carved handles for moving paneled sliding fall with lock; the whole being decorated with Arabesque Designs in Gold.

The above beautiful Organ was never equaled in the history of the organ trade for Excellence in every feature. Order direct from this advertisement, as I positively will not deviate from price, $60. Cash Orders take preference on order book.

COME TO WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY, AND SELECT AN ORGAN IN PERSON. YOU ARE CORDIALLY WELCOME.

You will be afforded an opportunity to inspect everything and satisfy yourself in every particular. Beware!—I unhesitatingly advise those who are about to order from other parties, not to do it. Order only the latest and best of all Organs. If you have already ordered, countermand your order, it may not be too late yet. An Organ lasts a lifetime, get only the latest style and best music combined. Remit by Post Office Money Order, Express Prepaid, Bank Draft or Register Letter. Money refunded and freight charges paid if all is not as represented. It is a well-known fact that I am the man that had the nerve to reduce the price of Pianos and Organs, in the face of untold abuse from the monopolist. The public should remember this and patronize the original not the imitator. REMEMBER any offer made (by imitators) no matter how low, I can beat it. WEIGH THESE WORDS CAREFULLY.—I dare not ship you a poor instrument as it is not possible for me to know who will test it. Agents invariably conceal defects and claim advantages for Organs they sell. My instruments must be good enough to silence maligners and defamers. They invariably prove satisfactory. Thousands are now in use. IT IS A FACT that my business has increased to such proportions that even now with a factory having ONE AND A HALF ACRES OF SPACE within the walls of building, filled with skilled artisans and best machinery is the reason I can offer this Organ so low. I am now enlarging my factory TO OVER DOUBLE ITS PRESENT SIZE. I should be glad to have you come here and visit my establishment.
